Senator Vandenberg Joins Drive to Stop Landon

Strikers Win French Fight; All Demands Are Accepted

Premier Blum Presides As Employers Agree To Five Proposals.

End of Walkout Expected Today

Application of Reforms Throughout Industry Is Promised.

By the United Press.

Paris, June 7.—Striking workers who threatened to paralyze France won complete victory tonight from employers with the aid of Leon Blum, Socialist premier.

Complete capitulation of the capitalists included agreements to:

1. General salary increases of from 7 to 15 per cent.
2. Forty-hour work-week.
3. Collective bargaining and contracts.
4. Vacations with pay.
5. Recognition of workers' delegates.

The only reservation employers made was that the government should present legislation assuring application of the reforms throughout French industry. Blum, presiding at the conference at which agreement was reached, pledged his influence to effect this as soon as possible.

Closed Shop Ushered In.

With recognition of the unions and capitulation to their demands, an era of the "closed shop" was ushered in in France, traditional seat of individualism. The agreement does not mean necessarily that all striking workers would return to work tomorrow, but the government was most optimistic. Individual claims remain to be settled, but this should be accomplished quickly.

Blum already has drawn up legislation for a 40-hour week and has promised to push it through Parliament as soon as possible, probably this week.

The premier's social reforms, approved by the Chamber of Deputies yesterday in a stormy session, coincided with rioting in Paris, spread of the strike and threat of an anti-Semitic movement.

Amid shouts of "back to Moscow," Blum was attacked by Right Wing factions in the chamber as "the first Jew ever to govern a Gallo-Roman country."

Meanwhile, the government took its first action against Right Wing critics.

Fascist Paper Suppressed.

Minister of Interior Roger Salengro ordered seizure of a special edition of Solidarite Francaise, organ of the French Fascist League, because of a violent editorial attack against the government.

Salengro asked the ministry of justice to open a judicial inquiry immediately with a view to prosecuting the publisher and editor.

Leon Jeahoux, head of the Confederation of Labor, assured the government he would do everything possible to hasten resumption of operations in the affected businesses.

More than 150,000 men joined the movement yesterday, bringing the total of the "folded arms army" to more than 1,000,000. Continuance of the strike would result in a food shortage for Paris and other leading cities.

The industries most affected are metallurgical, manufacturing, automobile, munitions and armaments, mining, wood working, trucking, clothing and textile.

Thirty thousand persons, including many strikers, jammed the Palais de Sports tonight to hear Blum address the people for the first time since becoming premier.

Blum merely repeated, in plain words, his ministerial declaration "aimed to benefit the man in the street." He was cheered wildly.

2 Admit Slaying Aged Carpenter

Two men confessed yesterday, police said, they killed William Ford, 62-year-old Bethesda, Md., carpenter, Saturday night to get his money. They were charged with murder.

John Thomas Dove, 36, colored, and William H. Parr, 28, both of Bethesda, gave different accounts of their murder of the aged carpenter in a Bethesda model home of which Ford was caretaker, Montgomery County authorities said.

Dove said he hit Allen with his fist and drove him across the room when Allen refused to lend him money Saturday night. Parr said he and Dove had planned since last month to kill the man.

Allen was found dead Saturday night by a relative, Riley Evers, who had come to the model home where Allen stayed. Evers called police, and they made plaster casts of footprints around the front door where there were signs of a scuffle.

Police compared the footprints to those of Dove. They matched, and the colored man was arrested. Parr was arrested later.

Missing Girl, Nude, Is Found Wedged in Organ of Church

Police, Called Twice by Sexton, Discover Her, Near Collapse.

Exhausted from shock and hunger, a 14-year-old nude girl was found yesterday wedged in the bottom of an 18-foot organ pipe in the Metropolitan A. M. E. Church at 1518 M street northwest.

The girl, Barbara Wallace, of 2019 Eye street northwest, was found in the bottom of the tubing when police were summoned to search the building after John A. Simms, colored, 1508 Caroline street northwest, sexton, heard tapping emanating from the organ.

It was the second time police had been called to the church. Simms summoned police about 10 p. m., Saturday when his attention was attracted by a noise from the organ. Simms said he saw an arm dangling over the top of a wind pipe.

Policemen J. L. Pumphrey and R. W. Rector, of the Third Precinct, searched the church Saturday night. They said they had searched the organ with flashlights and had found no one.

Simms again called police about 10 a. m., yesterday. The same policemen responded, and after a thorough search, Barbara was found at the bottom of the tube.

The Fire Department rescue squad was called and worked nearly an hour before the girl could be extracted. A section of the pipe had to be cut away.

The girl was taken to Emergency Hospital, where she was treated for shock and burns on her arms. Physicians said she told them someone had been chasing her and that she ran into the church Saturday night to hide. Her clothing was found in an alley behind the church.

BARBARA WALLACE.

The girl's mother, Mrs. Vivien E. Wallace, a stenographer, told police her daughter had been ill and was subject to lapses of memory.

Mrs. Wallace said Barbara left home about 5 a. m. Saturday at which time her disappearance was reported to police and a lookout broadcast.

The girl was released from the hospital after treatment.

Blum Expected To Pick Bonnet As U. S. Envoy

Laboulaye, Here Since '33, Now in Paris; Premier Plans Many Shifts.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, June 7.—Premier Leon Blum officials said today, is considering naming Georges Bonnet as ambassador to the United States to succeed Andre L. de Laboulaye.

They said Blum is planning "Wholesale" changes in France's foreign representatives but that the appointment of Bonnet, former minister of commerce and the French negotiator of the Franco-American trade treaty, has not yet been definitely decided.

Laboulaye is now in Paris on vacation. Bonnet is a member of the Radical Socialist Party and the Leftist "popular front."

Became Envoy in 1933.

Andre Lefevre de Laboulaye became French Ambassador to Washington in 1933.

M. de Laboulaye, a carefully groomed man who looks younger than his years, succeeded Paul Claudel in Washington.

He entered the French diplomatic service 35 years ago and has served in Rumania, Germany, Russia, at the Vatican and in the Quai d' Orsay in Paris. In his home office he was first assistant director of American affairs.

He now is in his third term in Washington. He was first attached to the French Embassy here in the Wilson Administration whe President Roosevelt was Secretary of the Navy. The two have been friends ever since.

Laboulaye came to America with war debts on his mind and before he left Paris told an audience of transplanted Americans that "accords which do not fully satisfy either party often are the most fruitful and enduring."

At the time he was selected as ambassador it was believed in French political circles that one of the chief reasons for his appointment was his friendship with President Roosevelt. The principal task he has faced during his stay in America has been that of reopening negogiations on the French war debt with the present administration.

He stayed in the international spotlight for many months some time ago when America and France were working on bartering of American apples for French wines.

Jury Convicts Luciano on All 62 Vice Counts

8 Aids Also Will Be Given N. Y. Terms; Guilty Men Face 1,865 Years.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—Charles Luciano, known to the underworld as "Lucky" since the time he came back alive from a gangland ride, was convicted on all 62 counts of a vice indictment by a jury early today.

Eight co-defendants, indicted with Luciano as overlords of a $12,000,000 compulsory prostitution syndicate in the Nation's metropolis, were found guilty on the same counts.

The nine defendants, facing maximum prison terms of 1,865 years, will be sentenced June 18.

The verdict, reached after all-night deliberation, virtually eliminated the "big shots" of the vice racket, according to the charges of Special Prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey.

It convicted Luciano, the alleged leader of organized vice; David Betillo, second in command; Thomas Pennochio, the treasurer; Abraham Wahrman, contact man; James Frederico, general manager of the combine; Benny Spiller, a financial backer of the ring; Jesse Jacobs, bondsman to the group, Meyer Berkman, Jacobs' subordinate, and Ralph Liguori.

It spelled the end of luck for the East Side youth who testified that his worst faults had been selling narcotics when a youth, taking and making bets at the race track, and sometimes carrying a gun or two "to shoot pheasants in July."

The end of that luck came in the sunny hours of early morning.

Twelve men returned from the jury room after deliberating for six and a half hours the vivid testimony of scores of prostitutes, gamblers, policemen and persons in all walks of life.

Jury Foreman Edwin Aderer stood up.

"Guilty . . . guilty . . . guilty" ran Aderer's monologue as "Lucky" hung his head on his hands and his co-conspirators shoved their chins into clenched fists and held their eyes away from the foreman who was reading them into a sentence which may mean the rest of their lives in prison.

More than 50 uniformed police and detectives were on hand to prevent what one police official

Wind Fells 400 Year-Old Oak, Capsizes 10 Boats on Potomac

The sudden squall that hit Washington yesterday afternoon uprooted an historic oak tree in the Conduit road section, capsized ten sailboats in the Potomac and sent the thermometer tumbling.

The tree downed by a gust was a landmark which figured in the life of George Washington and before his time in Indian history. It stood at Potomac avenue and Weaver place northwest.

It was a tree Congress nine years ago appropriated $10,000 to save, and the residents of Palisades Gardens, the community in which it was located, were as attached to it as to their own families.

The tree, which grew on a cliff overlooking a broad sweep of the Potomac River, was the center of an Indian camp long, long ago. Indian scouts were stationed there when the first white man's boat nosed up the Potomac River.

For years it was the lookout from which the Indians living in the region received warning of the white man's approach.

Legend says that the tree's branches sheltered many a powwow.

When the white man became more friendly it became a resting place. George Washington stopped there on many of his trips from Mount Vernon to Great Falls. He held a council with the Indians there, according to Mrs. H. J. Steimer, whose residence is near the tree's site.

When the District Commissioners several years ago announced plans for a boulevard along the river cliff, the citizens of Palisades Gar-

South China To Go to War, Officials Say

Provincial Chief Admits Troops Are Preparing To Fight Japan.

Leaders Scout Reports Canton Plans Battle Against Nanking.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Monday), June 8.—Two high officials of the Canton (South China) government said today its armies are marching in preparation for a war against Japan.

Both scouted reports Canton plans a civil war against the Nanking national government, dispatches reported.

Gen. Li Chung-Jen, commander in chief of the Kwangski troops of the Canton regime and head of the provincial government, was quoted as saying:

"It is absolute lunacy for Chinese to fight Chinese when the nation is menaced by a powerful foreign aggressor."

He admitted Kwangski troops are taking up a position on the Hunan Province border, but said it was "merely preparatory to marching against the Japanese." Other reports, denied by Nanking, said the southern forces had invaded Hunan.

Anti-Japanese Resistance.

Liu Lu-Yin, a member of the southwest Kuomintang (government party) and the central executive committee, said the southern armies plan no invasion of the north with anti-Nanking objectives but "the present military and political moves are designed to bring armed anti-Japanese resistance at this hour of the national crisis.

"We are merely urging Nanking to armed resistance against Japan, who has invaded Manchuria without regard to international treaty obligations and sent large bodies of troops to Tientsin and Peiping," he said.

Canton dispatches said there were rumors there Japan has vigorously protested to Nanking against southern troop movements and is likely to send gunboats to Canton to "protect nationals."

Meanwhile, it was said the advancing southern troops would keep at an appreciable distance from Nanking troops "pending clarification of the situation."

Oath Taking Ceremony.

The Canton regime's determination to force the anti-Japanese issue was indicated in an official announcement June 15 was selected for the "oath taking ceremony," when a long list of grievances against Japan will be aired.

Japanese dispatches last night said armies of the Canton (South China) government are continuing an invasion of Hunan Province but his was denied by other sources.

Reports of the Domei (Japanese) News Agency said the Southern Kwangsi and Kwantung Province armies reached Nengyang, in Hunan, where they are "consolidating preparatory to an advance on Changsha."

The Nanking government denied the push from the south into Hunan, asserting "no invasion of Hunan has occurred."

Two Provinces Occupied.

(A Hongkong dispatch said an unconfirmed report stated troops of Kwangsi Province occupied Chiyang while Kwantung forces occupied Chenchow, in southern Hunan. Kwangsi and Kwantung are the provinces making up the South China or Canton government.

(At the same time, these reports said, 120,000 troops of the Nanking National government are in northern Hunan, supposedly to fight Communists.

(Reports from Canton received in Hongkong said Wang Shao-Hung, former Kwagsi warlord, was expected in Canton by plane today to bring the Nanking government's final proposal for a reapprochement between Nanking and Canton.

(Several Canton brokers were arrested for exchange speculation and the government reportedly prohibited the buying of Hongkong currency except through the government at a fixed rate.)

No One Wants Post As Fairfax Mayor; It's a Payless Job

No one wants to be Mayor of Fairfax, Va.

Elections will be held tomorrow, but no one has filed for the post of mayor.

There are 270 qualified voters in the town and, since the job apparently has gone begging, the ballot will be blank and citizens will fill in the name of the man they wish for mayor, whether he wants it or not. They'll do the same for four city council posts, since only one man has filed for city council.

The same thing has happened for the past three elections.

The job of mayor has no salary.

Bloc Awaits Borah Arrival Today; 'Rubber Stamp' Session Is Decried

Moses Talks Over Radio in Effort to Break Kansan's Power

But Others Predict 2d Ballot Victory

75% of All Delegates West of Mississippi, Hamilton Claim.

By Felix Bruner.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 7.—Fighting a battle growing in hopelessness, forces opposing Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas for the Republican Presidential nomination were struggling tonight to stop his almost certain selection.

Reports that a coalition was forming against the Kansas Governor were strengthened by the fact that Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, a leader of the anti-Landon group, spent the afternoon visiting the headquarters of the various candidates.

Former Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, leader in the organization backing Col. Frank Knox, of Chicago, took to the radio with the demand that the convention opening Tuesday be not a "rubber stamp" convention.

Landon Camp Confident.

Meanwhile, friends of Landon were confidently anticipating his nomination on the first or second ballot.

John Hamilton, Landon's campaign manager, claimed the Kansas Governor would receive close to 75 per cent of the votes of all delegates from west of the Mississippi on the first ballot. Of the 307 votes in the convention from this section, he predicted that Landon would receive more than 200 on the first ballot and that he would have a reserve of at least 85 votes on the second.

"Landon will receive all but 25 or 30 votes west of the Mississippi," he said.

Asked whether Eastern delegates felt that Landon was the choice of the West, Hamilton declared the Easterners felt that the candidate must come from the West, and by the West I mean west of the Mississippi."

Stampede Predicted.

Hamilton predicted that when the roll call on the first ballot gets down to Pennsylvania, 50 per cent of the Western vote will have been cast for Landon. He referred to Pennsylvania as a typical Eastern State. His reference to the Keystone State was interpreted in some quarters as an indication that he believes a stampede to Landon will sweep the convention by the time the name of that State is called.

Hamilton said he felt that if a candidate received as many as 460 votes on the first ballot, enough additional delegates would switch to nominate him. After he places Landon in nomination there will be seven seconding speeches, including those of some women delegates, he announced.

Considerable importance was attached to the activities of Vandenberg in visiting various headquarters. Moses declared, however, that the Senators visit was just a "social call." Other leaders, including former Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, who is instructed for Landon but who prefers Knox, insisted there was no coalition of Landon opposition.

Many Look to Borah.

The situation appears to be that many of the Kansan's opponents see in a coalition the only possibility of making even a respectable showing toward stopping him, but that up to this time no actual coalition has been perfected. Many are looking to Senator Borah to bring unity to the position.

Moses claimed that Knox "certainly" would have 261 votes on the first ballot. He laughingly said he had added the claims of all the candidates and had discovered that on this basis there must be 3,654 delegates in the convention. The actual number is 1,003.

Moses said he was out when Vandenberg called, but that he had been informed the Michigan Sena-

Convention Is 'Man's World;' Women Hold 58½ of 1,003 Votes

Representation at Cleveland Is Scantiest Since Suffrage Was Granted, With Many of the State Delegations Entirely Male.

By Agnes E. Meyer.
Convention Bureau of The Washington Post.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 7.—A national political convention is still a man's world. In fact, the Republican Convention at Cleveland is more a man's world than it has been at any time since women got the vote.

This is evidenced not only by the masculine cigar-smoking, hat-over-one-ear crowds that jam every hotel lobby, but even more so by the list of delegates.

Out of 1003 duly elected members of this convention, only 60 are women and three of these have but half a vote. The State delegation with the highest percentage of women is California, which has sent seven women delegates out of a total of 44. New York comes next with eight women members in a delegation of 90, but most of the other States have but a single woman delegate and 14 States have none at all.

Massachusetts, for example, has refused to give its women even a single vote out of its 33, though it throws the sex a sop by allowing it 28 alternates. Michigan, although it has 38 delegates, also excludes women entirely. Illinois, with 57 members in its delegation, has sent but one woman, and Pennsylvania does not allow more than two places to women out of its 75.

States which give the women no representation whatsoever include Alabama, Indiana, Iowa, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Rhode Island, Virginia and Wyoming.

These are startling figures for the feminist to contemplate when it is remembered that this is the fifth Presidential convention since women won the battle for equal suffrage. Some explanation for the decrease in the number of women delegates can be found in the fact that the total of Republican delegates has decreased, owing to the overwhelming party defeat in 1932 which cuts down the representation of many States, but this in itself cannot excuse the pitifully small place which women have won for themselves in the high command of one of the major parties throughout the 17 years that they have had the vote. When that forthright political realist, LaFayette B. Gleason, secretary of the New York Republican State com-

Brief Platform Called Essential To Republicans

Constitution Amendment, Gold Standards, Tariffs Major Plank Issues.

By Robert C. Albright.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 7.—Amid the usual pre-convention disagreement over planks, sentiment among delegates was rapidly crystallizing here tonight in favor of a short, snappy Republican platform, presenting the issues so clearly that the masses can understand them without plowing through thousands of words of verbose text.

There were planks aplenty to be had for the asking—in fact nearly every delegate was carrying around mysterious-looking documents with high-sounding sentences on every subject from the Constitution to the tariff. The real fighting, it appears, is going to come on whittling these down to essential issues, taking just the right slant on the issues, and then stating them, above all, concisely.

Preliminary skirmishes broke out tonight on proposals, presumably originating in the Landon camp, for a platform declaration for a constitutional amendment, giving States the authority to regulate wages and hours.

Well received at the start, the suggestion carried the early indorse-

Lowden Refuses To Talk Politics

Oregon, Ill., June 7 (AP).—Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, who has been mentioned as a possible "dark horse" in the Republican National Convention, declined to talk about politics today.

Asked if he would consent to be the standard bearer of a "stop Landon" coalition reported to be gathering at Cleveland, the farm veteran replied:

"I'm afraid it's going to rain."

Would he accept the Presidential nomination if it was offered to him?

"I hope it doesn't rain, for that would spoil my afternoon ride."

Would he say anything about politics?

"No."

And, while leaders of his party speculated over what he would do, the "sage of Sinnissippi," who ran once for the Presidential nomination and once refused an offer to be the Vice Presidential candidate, rode his favorite horse about his Rock River Valley farm.

Sunflowers, Rain in Evidence, Cleveland Primps for Opening

By Sidney Olson.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 7.—With rain in her face and a sunflower on her bosom, Cleveland primped all day today for her first date with the Republican Party since 1924.

The sunflower—emblem of Landon and Kansas—was everywhere, in even greater numbers than the American eagles and overstuffed elephants that traditionally welcome the Grand Old Party. If Landon's opponents have not conceded his nomination, the shopkeepers of Cleveland have.

This is the second time in this city's history that the sunflower has taken the town. In 1882 a tall, graceful young man named Oscar Wilde, dressed in a black velvet coat and knee-breeches, came to Cleveland to lecture on "The Aesthetic Life," and while Cleveland didn't know what the aesthetic life was, the citizens seized on Wilde's symbol, the sunflower, as a pretty hilarious item, and displayed it everywhere. When he delivered his lecture, a troop of college students paraded down the aisle, each bearing a sunflower.

A replica of this scene, in an entirely different key, is expected here this week, when hundreds of screaming men, sunflowers on their lapels and mass hysteria in their eyes, will jam the aisles in the mammoth auditorium to parade for the Kansas Governor.

This auditorium, incidentally, is really terrific. It's a whole flock of

By Franklyn Waltman,
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 7.—Working quietly and without publicly committing himself, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, today joined the forces seeking to stop the march of Gov. Alf M. Landon toward the Republican Presidential nomination. The movement is expected to reach full bloom tomorrow, when Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, strides on the convention city scene.

Vandenberg's arrival and the anticipated assistance from Senator Borah stirred the hopes of the anti-Landon groups, but John Hamilton, Landon campaign manager, professed to be more confident than ever that the Kansan would be nominated on the second if not the first ballot.

The anti-Landon coalition developed a weak link during the day, when it was revealed that Dan Turner, spokesman for the Iowa delegation, had warned Senator Lester Jesse Dickinson, of that State, that if he became active in the effort to stop Landon, a majority of the delegation would desert him and vote for the Kansan on the first ballot.

Warning Is Heeded.

The warning apparently was heeded because Dickinson insisted to newspaper correspondents later in the day that while he remained a candidate for the nomination, he was not trying to stop any one. A majority of the Iowa delegation is friendly to Landon and undoubtedly will jump to him on the second ballot, if there is a second ballot.

The anti-Landon leaders are chiefly banking on keeping unbroken the ranks of the "favorite sons" and so-called "dark horses." If these break—and they are now wavering—they know that they will have absolutely no chance of stopping the Kansan. Consequently, the muzzling of Senator Dickinson is not an exorbitant price to pay for keeping the Iowa delegation away from Landon on the first ballot.

Some Groups Restless.

Several of the "favorite son" delegations are becoming restless. They see little chance for their "favorite" and they fear that unless they jump quickly to the Landon band wagon they will be left in the cold. The North Carolina delegation, committed to Judge Isaac Meekins, a favorite son, is one of these.

The Landon management can have a majority of the North Carolina delegation whenever they want it. So far, the Landon managers have said that the second ballot will be early enough for a switch, but some of the North Carolinians are fearful there will be no second ballot and tonight they were debating whether they should not on their own accord break sooner to Landon.

The Maryland delegation is another counted as friendly to Gov. Landon when it gets through presenting Gov. Harry W. Nice as a favorite son. Republican State Chairman William P. Lawson tonight, however, issued a statement insisting the delegation would stick to Nov. Nice—but he did not say for how long. Nice beamed all over when it was suggested to him that

Fireworks Expected to Mark District Credentials Contest at Cleveland Tomorrow

Colladay Coup At Convention Stirs Roverites

Committeeman to Request Increae Number of Capital Delegates.

By Edward T. Folliard.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, June 7.—The next round in the contest between the District of Columbia's rival slates of delegates to the Republican National Convention promises to be marked by plenty of fireworks.

The first round ended Friday when the Republican National Committee voted to place the delegates and alternates of National Committeeman Edward F. Colladay on the temporary roll of the convention.

That meant that the Colladay group will be gathered around the District of Columbia standard when the convention opens Tuesday, while the delegates and alternates of Leo A. Rover are knocking at the door.

The next round comes Tuesday night when the committee on credentials, appointed by the convention, hears the District contest all over again. This committee will recommend to the convention which slate of delegates and alternates—that of Colladay or that of Rover—is to be placed on the permanent roll and allowed to take part in the balloting for Presidential and Vice Presidential nominees.

Roverites Bitter.

The Rover people, though saying nothing today for publication, feel pretty bitter. They are particularly bitter over the "bombshell" that Colladay exploded before the national committee Friday.

This was an affidavit purporting to come from the Rev. L. R. Frayser, a colored clergyman, to the effect that he "received $5" for giving the Rover group an affidavit valuable to their cause.

The Rover group was not prepared for such a charge. Since then, they say, they have investigated and found it "wholly false."

They feel that Colladay, by submitting the Frayser affidavit, cast a reflection on their honor.

Men like Joshua Evans, jr., the banker, and women like former Assistant District Attorney M. Pearl McCall, they argued, do not go in for such tactics as passing out $5 bills for political information. Evans and Miss McCall are Rover delegates.

Colladay Asks Increase.

National Committeeman Colladay told The Post tonight that he would make a determined effort before the rules committee to have the District's number of delegates in future conventions increased from three to six. Alaska and Hawaii, said he, would join him in this.

If the District had been entitled to six delegates this year, the chances are there would have been no factional fight.

The trouble started when Colladay expressed a desire to come to Cleveland both as national committeeman and as a delegate. The practice in the District has been to apportion the three delegate seats among a white man, a white woman and a colored man.

Those who ultimately turned against Colladay thought he should be satisfied to come here as national committeeman and allow Evans to come as a delegate.

Calls Caucus Today.

Colladay today called a caucus of his group for tomorrow at 9:30 a. m. At that time, it will be decided which of the Colladay delegates are to serve on the important committees on resolutions, credentials, rules and permanent organizations. The caucus also will fill out papers nominating Colladay for another term as national committeeman and Mrs. Virginia White Speel for another term as national committeewoman.

Of course, if the credentials committee decide to seat the Rover delegates the caucus of the Colladay group will have been in vain.

Rover has been selected by his faction for the office of national committeeman to succeed Colladay. Mrs. Speel, however, is the choice of both factions.

Both the Colladay group and the Rover group are quartered in the Statler Hotel here. The members of the two groups still speak to each other, but, in some cases, the greetings are strained.

Rover was in Washington tonight, but he planned to return here Tuesday.

Cleveland

he was really aiming for the Vice President nomination.

Hamilton and Representative Joseph Martin, the Landon floor leader, are perfectly willing to have a second ballot nomination. They want to give those delegations committed to favorite sons, such as Maryland and North Carolina, a chance to fulfill such commitments on the theory there will be greater harmony after the nomination is made. But the delegates may not wait.

Evidences of an effort to start a boom on behalf of former President Herbert Hoover appeared today when more than 200 postal cards bearing a striking similarity in the typewriting, but mailed from various places on Long Island, arrived at the New York headquarters addressed to delegates from that State.

The cards urged that an ovation be given to the former President after his speech here Wednesday night. One card called on the delegation to nominate Hoover and asserted that "he is destined to be the modern 'Cincinnatus called from his plow.'"

Failure in Prospect.

But the effort to boost Hoover with the New York delegation seemed destined to failure. That State's huge delegation arrived here tonight in two special trains. They left New York early this morning as a "rep cap" band played "Oh, Suzanna," the Landon campaign song.

On arrival John R. Crews, King's County Republican leader, asserted that 14 of Brooklyn's 15 delegate votes would be cast for Landon on the first ballot and that at least 70 of the State's 90 votes would go for the Kansan. Other county leaders agreed with him.

The Landonites believe that when the New York and Pennsylvania delegations caucus tomorrow night their foes will be completely deflated. An overwhelming majority of the New York and Pennsylvania delegations are expected to vote for Landon in these caucuses.

Meanwhile talk regarding the platform planks continued but without any new developments, except unanimity of opinion that the platform should be a brief, concise document. Controversy still rages whether the party should espouse a constitutional amendment clothing the States with authority to deal with vital economic problems.

Hoover's approval of the proposal has biven it some strength but on the other hand, a number of Republican leaders remained doubtful whether the party should go so far.

All, however, agree on the soundness and expediency of adopting a strong States' rights plank. The effort to write a money plank without mentioning the word "gold" while at the same time making it clear that the party is opposed to monetary experimentation, goes on with various degrees of success. The demand for an explicit statement advocating tariff protection of the home market for the American farmer grew in volume during the day.

Virtually all the delegates who have not arrived will be here sometime tomorrow with caucuses being held throughout the day and evening. At these meetings the delegations will designate their representatives on the resolutions, rules, credentials and organization committees and in some cases will agree on their attitude toward Presidential candidates.

Politics and People

Lack of Unity on Objectives and Candidates Hampers Anti-Landon Bloc.

By Franklyn Waltman

CLEVELAND, June 7.—One need only spend a few hours in the camps of the anti-Landon groups here to find the reason why the nomination for the Republican Presidential nomination of Gov. Alf M. Landon is inevitable. The reason after the first few minutes stands out as prominently as a bandaged thumb.

WALTMAN.

The reason is that the various figures who comprise what is known as the "stop Landon" movement have neither a common objective nor a common candidate, plus the fact that, with the exception of Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, not one of the anti-Landon group is willing to sacrifice himself to bring about the Kansan's slaughter.

The latter reason is an important one. It goes back to the old political adage that "you cannot beat someone with nobody." The Landonites have a candidate around whom they can rally. There is a central leadership in the movement and decisions can be made quickly and effectively.

The anti-Landon group, however, can not move with precision. Before any concerted action can be taken—assuming the courage to take it—four or five candidates and campaign managers must be consulted and each has his own idea of what should be done. If all the anti-Landon foes were behind one candidate the prospects for the Kansan's nomination would not be as bright as they are.

But it has not been possible to mold them behind one candidate. The Knox followers for the most part are conservatives and would perish if they took up the cudgels for Senator Borah. Imagine the Knox spokesman, former Senator George H. Moses, of "Sons of the Wild Jackass" fame, booming the Borah candidacy. He would look funnier than he does now when he claims Col. Knox is "running neck-to-neck" with Gov. Landon.

The Knox folks do not like Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg nor Senator Lester Jesse Dickinson of "dog meat" fame. Indeed, they like only Col. Knox. Senator Vandenberg is strongly for any "stop Landon" movement that can be devised, just so long as it does not put him on the firing-line.

Senator Vandenberg believes that only Gov. Landon stands between him and the Presidential nomination—but he is unwilling to incur the hostility of the Landonites by making any smashing blows at the Kansan. And the Michigan Senator is thinking of 1940 and he does not wish to inflict any wounds this year which may come back to plague him if he has a chance four years hence.

The Vandenberg attitude is something like that of the Southern darky who worked for the circus when the tiger got loose. He thought there was "a wonderful opportunity for somebody to be a hero" by capturing the raging cat, but he was certain "that somebody is not me." Senator Vandenberg believes there is a great opportunity for "somebody to stop Landon," but he is sure "that somebody is not me."

And then there is Senator Borah, nearing the sunset of life. His ambitions necessarily are limited and today he is not thinking of himself. He is ready, so it is understood, to put his shoulder to the wheel for Senator Vandenberg, but he is not at all certain that if Gov. Landon is stopped his Michigan friend will be the beneficiary.

The Lion of Idaho is disturbed by the thought that he might be instrumental in blocking Gov. Landon's nomination and then find the "old guard" on the top of the pile. When he looks about him and sees some of his associates in the "stop Landon" movement, Senator Borah gets chills. There are George Moses, some of the "old guard," some of Herbert Hoover's friends and Senator Dickinson. The Idahoan shudders every time the thought occurs to him that if Gov. Landon is stopped, Senator Dickinson or Mr. Hoover may be the nominee—and he has been thinking about that possibility lately.

Senator Dickinson would like to see Gov. Landon stopped, but his hands seemed pretty well tied. The Iowan suffers under the handicap of having behind his candidacy a delegation, the majority of whom look with friendliness on the Landon candidacy. Most of these men have little faith in Senator Dickinson's chances and they want to be counted among the bandwagon riders before it is too late.

Some of these Landon friends in the Iowa delegation would like to desert Senator Dickinson right now—and they can, since they are not bound to him. At all events they have served notice on the Senator that if he gets too aggressive in his opposition to the Kansan, they will walk out on him. And let it be remembered, Senator Dickinson is a candidate for reelection this year in Iowa and cannot afford to alienate any segment of the Republican Party.

Since the field of candidates cannot agree on any one of their number for all to get behind, suggestions have been made to bring in a new name. That is the basis for all the talk about former Gov. Frank O. Lowden. But this so-called Lowden boom has been a dud.

It is a dud because it so palpably is an artificial movement. Many Republican delegates love Frank Lowden as the grand old man of the party, but they know that at the age of 75 years he would not be a serious Presidential possibility. Instead they regard him, if he lets his name be used, as a stalking horse for some one else—and delegates to this convention want to know in advance who that "somebody else" is.

Perhaps the picture may change when the convention gets under way, but an observation which has been repeated around hotel corridors frequently in the last two or three days is that this will be "a delegates' convention." Interpreted, this cryptic phrase means that the delegates will make the decisions as they see fit and not submit to the orders of party bosses or smoke-filled-room conferences.

Younger and more alert-looking delegates are cited as evidence of this conclusion. These younger men and women, a large number of them in their thirties or early forties, do not speak the name of Charles Dewey Hilles in hushed, reverent tones. They think he is just a glum and weary-looking old man. It is the youthful, red-haired John Hamilton who appeals to them.

Maryland Bloc To Stand Firm On Nice Pledge

Paper's Hint of Switch to Landon Draws Denial From Leaders.

Cleveland, June 7.—The Maryland delegation to the Republican National Convention served notice tonight that it is not to be stampeded—at least on the first ballot.

Gov. Harry W. Nice, of Maryland, arrived late today and read a story in a local newspaper that prompted a statement to that effect from one of his supporters.

The story said in effect that Maryland's 16 delegates, while pledged to Gov. Nice, really were for Gov. Alf M. Landon, of Kansas, the favorite for the Presidential nomination.

Gov. Nice went into a huddle with William P. Lawson, Republican State chairman of Maryland, and other G. O. P. leaders from Maryland.

Thereafter a statement was issued under the name of Chairman Lawson. It follows:

"On my arrival, I was shown a statement in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, which I quote:

" 'Maryland's 16 delegates are instructed for Gov. Harry W. Nice, of that State, but are reported to be headed into the Landon column after complimenting Gov. Nice.'

"From just whom this report emanates, I, of course, have no knowledge.

"There is no truth in this statement. Maryland Republicans have confidence in the ability of their Governor to win this coming election, and have expressed that confidence through binding instructions to the Maryland delegation.

"Maryland's 16 votes will be cast for the nomination of Harry W. Nice for the Presidency of the United States. Of that let there be no mistake.

"We did not come out here to cast a complimentary vote for Gov. Nice. We came out here to nominate him if it be humanely possible.

Not "Anti-Landon."

Gov. Nice was asked afterward if the statement could be interpreted to mean that he was against Landon.

"No," he said, "It is not an anti-Landon statement. Neither is it an anti-Knox, anti-Vandenberg, or anti-anybody else statement. It ought to speak for itself. It is a pro-Nice statement."

It was suggested to Gov. Nice that what he was really aiming at was the nomination for Vice President.

"You haven't heard me deny it, have you?" he said.

Nominating speeches for the Presidential candidates will be made Thursday. The speech placing Gov. Nice in nomination already has been prepared.

Gov. Nice said tonight the speech probably would be delivered by his nephew, Deely Nice, chief judge of the People's Court of Baltimore.

Gov. Nice came here by automobile, his favorite mode of travel. At the wheel was Mrs. Edna Nice, First Lady of Maryland. She has driven the Governor through every State in the Union and through parts of Mexico and Canada.

She made the 412-mile trip from Baltimore to Cleveland in 9 hours and 35 minutes. In the car besides her and Gov. Nice were Judge Nice and W. H. Blakeman, State budget director.

Trailing them in an auto loaded with luggage was Sergt. Manesh Katz, of the Maryland State police.

A "Nice for President" headquarters will be opened on the first floor of the Statler Hotel this morning.

Galen L. Tait, for many years chairman of the Republican State committee for Maryland, is here openly rooting for Gov. Landon for the Presidential nomination.

Strike's End Discussed.

Marietta, O., June 7 (AP).—Union workers of the Remington-Rand plant here gathered at a special meeting tonight to discuss a settlement of the strike which has been in progress for the past fortnight. Leaders intimated there was a strong possibility that the 125 employes would return to work Monday morning.

Last-Minute Battle Is Waged By Landon Foes at Cleveland

'Rubber-Stamp' Conclave Decried by Moses in Radio Speech.

tor had stated "only his own views." He said he had not been in touch with Borah "except a as fellow irreconciliable."

Referring to the "stop-Landon" movement, he said:

"I have no negative purpose. My purpose is strictly affirmative—to nominate Frank Knox if it can be done."

Sees No Action Before Friday.

Moses predicted that no candidate for President would be nominated before Friday. He insisted that because of the long preliminary program, balloting could not be started before Thursday night, and he predicted there would be at least five ballots. He said there would be nominating speeches for 11 candidates for President.

One of the things which will slow down the proceedings, he said, will be speeches by distinguished guests, to whom he referred as "distinguished jests." Former President Hoover is the only guest speaker on the program.

Asked concerning a Vice Presidential candidate, Hamilton said he would sit with his arms folded and eyes shut on that question, but referring to Vandenberg's statement that he would not accept the nomination, Hamilton recalled that Charles Curtis in 1928 had made the same statement in much more emphatic form and then had accepted.

Hamilton said that anonymous attacks on Landon, in the form of handbills, had added to his strength.

"We have had definite accretions every time there has been one of those anonymous attacks," he said. "A large number of delegates came to this convention who believe Landon was the logical nominee but who, because of local conditions thought they would vote for somebody else at the start. But when they saw the anonymous attacks and heel biting they decided to vote for Landon on the first ballot."

Refers to Attacks.

Hamilton made it clear that he did not refer to attacks by any individual but to attacks for which no one took responsibility. He said he did not know the origin of the circulars and laughingly denied that the Landon forces were responsible for them.

The coalitionists appeared to be depending a great deal on what would happen when Senator Borah arrived. Borah headquarters was mysterious about when that would be. There were rumors that he was in the city tonight but not making his presence known. Other reports were that he would be here in the morning.

Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), New York, declared that "when Borah arrives you will find this Landon strength is all newspaper talk."

Vandenberg's statement that Borah would relieve him of responsibility, with the fact that the Michigan Senator and the Idahoan conferred for two hours yesterday, lent importance to the latter's position in the "stop Landon" movement.

GEORGE H. MOSES.

On the other hand, Walter Brown, former Postmaster General and national committeeman from Ohio, still was holding out for former President Hoover. He indicated he was looking forward to the effect of the Hoover speech at the convention Wednesday night.

Members of the New York delegation received anonymous postal cards urging them to participate in a demonstration for the former President.

Senator Dickinson, of Iowa, who has just been renominated for the Senate but who has not abandoned his Presidential aspirations, arrived late in the day. He denied he was a part of any coalition against anybody.

"I am not fighting anybody," he said.

"Are you still a candidate?" he was asked.

"I sure am," he replied.

"This can not be a rubber stamp convention," Moses said in his radio talk. "Is it logical for this body to condemn a rubber stamp Congress and itself be a rubber stamp convention?

"We must show to the people that it is a free assembly, that the candidate selected is a free choice of the delegates. What we must have is a nomination and election campaign of sincerety, not of ballyhoo.

"We have had three years of government by ballyhoo. The American people do not like it. We are here on serious business. We must treat it seriously."

Moses said the campaign would see a new alignment of forces and that the issue would be "between New Dealers and that innumerable company of men and women who continue to think well of their country."

"Battle," Says Vandenberg.

Vandenberg, upon his arrival in Cleveland, issued a formal statement in which he said:

"I am not interested in bandwagons. I am interested in principles. This is not a circus. It is a crusade.

"It is not a job hunt. It is a battle.

"I continue to want a platform which will deserve the support of the American people and leadership which the country knows to be sound and knows to be equal to effective and aggressive combat."

Hamilton professed not to know to whom Vandenberg was referring.

"The statement doesn't apply to Landon in any way, shape or form," he said. "I think it is a splendid statement, but I don't know whom he is talking about."

Snap Judgment Scored.

Vandenberg declared he did not think the convention was over "either as to platform or candidates."

He added that this statement was not aimed at anyone and that he did not believe this was a time for snap judgment. He said that he himself had not asked for the vote of a single delegate.

Then he made a significant remark:

"Senator Borah will arrive tonight and will relieve me of considerable responsibility."

Delegates Demand Brevity and Clarity in Republican's Platform for 1936

First Skirmish On Amendment To Constitution

ment of former President Herbert Hoover and Representative Bertrand H. Snell, permanent convention chairman. Tonight, however, the proposal was encountering some sniping, with Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, and Senator Lester J. Dickinson, of Iowa, among those who questioned the need for constitutional tampering, even in the wages and hours field.

Opposing Arguments.

The argument of those who indorsed it, seemed to be:

"The Democrats are going to do it—why shouldn't we?"

The opposition asked the question:

"Why should we pull Mr. Roosevelt's chestnuts out of the fire?"

And there the matter rested. It is certain, however, that the Constitution will be one of at least three major issues that will encounter a heated fight in the resolutions committee before the platform sees the convention light of day.

The other two are the monetary plank—gold standard versus managed currency; and the tariff—indorsing reciprocal trade agreements, or restoring full tariff powers to Congress. The farm plank presents a field for another controversy, but the principal fighting here is expected to come on minor points and questions of wording.

Demand Concision.

The cry for conciseness in platform drafting overshadowed most others, as the various State delegations prepared to meet today to select their representatives on the resolution committee, charged with actual drafting of planks.

In 1932 the Republican platform carried some 12,000 words, heading off with a long introduction and another 500 words on the nebulous subject of leadership.

The Democratic platform on the other hand contained just about 2,500 words. It was short enough to be read. Some G. O. P. candidates here want to go the Democrats one better this year and sum up the Republican issues in 1,000 to 1,200 words.

Senator Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon, temporary convention chairman, and Republican "keynoter," is one of the leading advocates of brevity.

"I like the idea of a short platform," Steiwer said tonight. "I hope it will be possible to present the Republican case in the shortest possible form."

Former Senator Hiram Bingham, of Connecticut, four times a member of the Republican Resolutions Committee, was carrying about in his pocket, a 1,000-word tentative platform. He favored a brief preamble, "giving hell to the Democrats," and as few planks as possible.

Henry J. Allen, of Kansas, who has represented the Landon forces in the last several weeks in evolving platform ideas, East and West, said he favored a platform of about 1,200 words.

Exponents of brevity argued that only in this manner could they get the Republican message across to the people, and that surplus verbiage, although interesting from a historical point of view, would go mostly unread, and mostly serve to confuse the issues.

Amendment Plank.

As platform discussion tonight narrowed down to specific planks, the question of a constitutional amendment giving States more authority in the field of wages and hours regulations overshadowed most others.

Strategy behind the proposal is aimed to attract the mass of more moderate voters disgruntled because of the Supreme Court's New York decision, but unwilling to go all the way in giving the Federal Government full power in this realm.

The proposal is to broaden the fourteenth amendment to give the States unquestioned authority. Those who oppose the amendment point out that whether the State or Federal Governments are given more power in the wages and hours field, it would mean "the people" would have to relinquish some of the rights they now possess.

The "no man's land" Mr. Roosevelt has invaded in annexing additional powers for the executive, actually belongs, they say, under the Constitution to "the States and the people." Hence, it follows, they argue, that additional power for the States could only come from the people. These rights, they contend, include the right to contract, the right to resign a job or work for what wages they choose, and a number of latent powers having to do with personal freedom.

But here the arguments get technical. Senator Vandenberg, while conceding the States should have ultimate authority in this field, questioned the advisability of an amendment.

"It is a question whether we should jump to the conclusion that an amendment is necessary," he said. "That is a legalistic question. The fact that one 5-to-4 decision by the Supreme Court, which seemed to close the door, raised the question, did not make overhasty action advisable."

"The court has raised the question before. Different shading and terminology in an act may make a difference. Some State acts might stand up."

Senator Dickinson, "keynoter" of the 1932 Republican Convention, said simply that he saw no necessity for an amendment.

The preponderance of sentiment, however, appeared to be the other way. Many leaders thought such an amendment would be excellent strategy, beating the Democrats to the gun if they took equivalent action, and possibly embarrassing the Jeffersonians in the campaign with the strong constitutional element if they went a step further and asked Federal authority in this field.

Dickinson Opposed.

Among those who thought it was "sound" strategy was Permanent Chairman Snell, who made his statement within a few hours after Hoover, from Ogden, Utah, indorsed the suggestion. Snell said he thought it would remove the issue "from politics."

Among the host of platform suggestions that came filtering in yesterday was one by former Senator Walter E. Edge, who wants to redraft, and embrace in the platform, the Declaration of Independence.

The 1,000-word platform being carried about by former Senator Bingham advocated the McNary "three-way" farm plank, embodying the export debenture, equalization fee and domestic allotment methods of meeting the farm problem; stabilization of international exchange by agreements with individual nations and a "support the Constitution" plan.

A great deal of time will be devoted to drafting of "spending" and "budget balancing" planks, for in these the Republicans feel they have their main issues. Unlike the Constitution, tariff and money planks, here there is fight only over language and not over substance.

A minor struggle is brewing on the question of relief, with those in favor of passing administration back to the States apparently in the ascendancy. The more liberal element, headed by Senator William E. Borah, however, opposes this plank on the ground that it would divide responsibility between State and Federal governments and make for inefficient administration.

Centering in the Landon camp, wide support is being mustered for the farm plank of Representative Clifford Hope, of Kansas. It calls for a subsidy to the farmer representing the difference between the tariff on manufactured articles he must buy and the tariff on agricultural products, and is aimed at meeting the New Deal program with one just as good and at less cost. Payments to farmers under tariff differentials would cover only "family size" farms—640 acres in the great plains area; 160 acres in the general farm area, eastward to the Alleghenies, and even less where farms are located near cities. Soil conservation, under State administration, and crop insurance, also is provided.

The money plank has all delegates worried, but there is reason to doubt it will provide for a return to the gold standard. Whatever is done, it probably will call for a return to Congress of the right to coin money and regulate its value; for an attempt at international stabilization of currencies, and for "sound money" to be preserved at all hazards.

Other planks on which delegates generally feel there will be some expression include employment, social security, foreign trade, banking, Government simplification, decentralization of powers, civil service and a declaration in favor of full and complete anti-trust law expression.

Cleveland Primps for Tuesday

words like huge, vast, tremendous, immense and behemoth.

A genial guard named Joe let visitors in freely today. He said:

"We ain't going to get tough until Monday night. Then you'll have to have a ticket, a pass, a key to the city and a shoehorn to get in."

Outside, the building looks something like Washington's Government buildings—a block long and four stories high—except that it's almost windowless and hasn't a pillar anywhere in sight. Inside you see first a long, long corridor. The high whine of buzzing wood saws cuts through the hubbub of milling mechanics, sound-test men, motion picture men, carpenters and painters. The smell of fresh paint, from scores of buckets, being hastily slopped on new wood railings, platforms and stands, is thick and rich.

Here's the lay-out:

First, picture a huge theater, of 3,000 seats, orchestra, balcony and second balcony, all in typical motion-picture house style, and all sloping down to a huge stage.

Steel Curtain on Stage.

Lift the great steel curtain from the rear of this stage and extend the hall on and through the back of the stage into an enormous auditorium.

Facing the stage from this end are thousands of seats, every one on the floor lettered with the name of a State. A huge horseshoe balcony, with more thousands of seats, circles the auditorium. Altogether, more than 14,000 people will pack into this great stone house.

Those in the theater, and those in the auditorium will thus be able to stare at the stage, which has now been reversed, so that it fronts on the auditorium. From it a long pier extends into the auditorium. Here the chairman will stand before a pulpit which reaches chin-high, and in which are embedded three new-type microphones.

At his left hand is a stand on whose flat top are some 106 buttons, 1 black and 1 white button for each delegation. Here he can control the scores of microphones on the floor, with a touch on one button bringing in the microphone for a delegation, and with another touch cutting it off.

Tables for Press.

On each side of the long pier are long, narrow linoleum-covered writing tables for the press. On each side of the stage are two small glass-inclosed two-story towers for the broadcasting systems and the public address systems. The great black horns of the latter are trucked up and down from the roof far overhead on cables the size of Carnera's arm.

There is still another theater in this building, an underground garage, scores of committee rooms and offices.

This size is exhausting. The visitor departs like a tourist leaving the catacombs in Rome, wearied of the immensity of the labyrinth.

The day, mostly steaming, with a steady slashing rain, occasionally cleared with swift sunlight, to the delight of motion picture cameramen. They are posted everywhere, usually on the tops of taxicabs.

One newsreel group was shooting a yelling newsboy, hawking convention editions of the newspapers. As soon as the chief shouted "cut," the "newsboy" handed his papers back to a newsdealer, slicked back his hair and stepped into the cab with the director of the shot.

A trio of gray-suited men, one with a guitar, one with a clarinet and one with a violin, wandered into the Hotel Hollenden, luxurious headquarters of the Landon group. The second floor contains the actual business end of the headquarters, but on the third floor is a long hall, fitted with chairs, a massive portrait of "Our Alf," framed in brilliant cut-glass, and stacks of literature, where lesser visitors can enroll enthusiastically on the bandwagon without disturbing the speculations of the strategists on the floor below.

The three serenaders, tired-looking, but still going strongly, mechanically strike up, "Oh Susanna," official Landon song, as they get off the elevator, but stop as soon as they enter the hall and find it empty of all but two "greeters."

"How'd it go?" shouts one of the greeters.

"We killed 'em," says one of the serenaders, in simple tribute to his own skill.

As popular as "Oh Susanna," however, is the song that raged in night clubs and over the radio during the spring—"Goody, Goody," which relates touchingly the singer's glee that the object of his unrequited affections has met some one at last who is in turn breaking his heart. It is sung by Republicans here, with President Roosevelt in mind.

A report of a third song went around tonight. The story had it that the Landon band went around to Borah headquarters to play "When I Grow Too Old to Dream."

New York Group Given to Landon

En Route to Cleveland With the New York State Delegation, June 7 (AP).—Half a dozen party leaders tonight predicted that New York State's 90 uninstructed delegates to the Republican National Convention would vote almost solidly for Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas.

Among the leaders making this forecast were John R. Crews, Kings County chairman; J. Russell Sprague, Nassau County chairman; Warren B. Ashmead, Queens County chairman, and Edward F. Jaeckle, Erie County chairman.

They generally agreed that the Kansas Governor would receive at least 70 of the States' 90 votes on the first ballot with an increasing number on succeeding ballots in the event there are more than one.

In addition to the 15 delegates who previously had announced they were for Landon, 22 others have declared for him in the last 24 hours, bringing the total known Landon supporters to 37.

There were a few votes, leaders said, for Senator Vandenburg, of Michigan, and Col. Frank Cox.

Susanna Yields Place in Song To Gov. Landon

Backers Change Old-Time Ditty for Use as Kansan's 'Victory' Chant.

Cleveland, June 7.—The official Landon campaign song, "Oh, Susanna" tricked out with new lyrics by Win Williams and Romney Gifford, was being bellowed in hotel corridors and on street corners last night as earnest delegates learned the words. Here they are:

Our ship of state is on the rocks,
and soon it will be sunk,
It has no pilot at the wheel, but regimented bunk,
It wanders to the right and left, it
flounders all around,
It needs a captain on the bridge whose reckoning is sound.

CHORUS.

Landon, oh, Landon will lead to victory—
With the dear old Constitution and it's good enough for me.

The alphabet we'll always have, but one thing sure is true
With Landon in, the raw deal's out, and that means P. D. Q.
Alf Landon learned a thing or two,
he knows the right situation
And in the White House he will stay, within the Constitution.

In this new deal of alphabets that runs from "A" to "Z"
You've only had experiments all full of lunacy,
And if at first they don't succeed
they try and try again.
While out of work you still can find about 12,000,000 men.

We've had enough emergency, enough experiment—
We've seen the money go all right, but don't know where it went.
With Landon as the President our country safe will be.
And we can go to work again without a brain trustee.

If Roosevelt could have his way
we'd all be in his grip,
And soon he's change the SHIP OF STATE to his dictatorship.
He'd make Il Duce and Hitler green with envy in their eye—
American traditions we would have to kiss good-bye.
(Special chorus)
Landon, oh Landon will lead to victory—'cause there're thousands upon thousands who will "take a walk" with me.

Party Invites Public to Write 1936 Platform

Letters Attacking New Deal Read by Republicans in Broadcast.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—A broadside of letters and speeches attacking the New Deal were read and delivered in a Republican Nation-wide radio "town meeting" tonight and the public was invited to send suggestions to Cleveland for a Republican campaign platform.

"We Republicans are asking you, the people, to write the planks—and so make your platform and ours one and the same," announced Perry Osborn, vice president of the National Republican Club. The public was instructed to wire or mail its recommendations to the Associated Republican Clubs, Cleveland.

Letters from a dozen persons in widely separated sections of the country suggesting changes to be advocated by the Republican Party were read.

Platform Failure Charged.

Mrs. Bernice Van Derr Vies, Illinois State representative, speaking from Chicago, charged the Democratic Party with failing to fulfill its 1932 platform pledge to extend Federal credit to States unable to provide their own relief funds.

"My State is threatened by the admission of its own Governor," said the Illinois Assembly woman, "with bloodshed and rioting because relief has been denied by the Federal Government."

Lawrence Sullivan, writer, speaking from Washington, attacked the Democrats on their 1932 plank to reduce expenditures and to abolish "useless commissions and offices."

Mrs. George A. Wyeth left the New York convention delegation train at Rochester, N. Y., to warn that increasing cost of government may pave the way for a dictatorship.

Letters Are Read.

Among letters selected for reading were those from James W. Holton, Wyandotte, Mich.; Max Schnipf, Buffalo, N. Y.; Michael P. Elieff, Chicago; Fred Hatch, Pottsville, Pa.; Francis E. Frothingham, Boston; Warren P. Beaubien, Whiting, Ind.; John Hay Kuhns, Tempe, Ariz.; Henry Wood Beauchamp, Dayton, Ohio; A. H. Chase, Battle Creek, Mich.; Charles C. Porter, Chicago; Martin Smith, Bayonne, N. J.; John Munro, Rifle, Calif., and Dr. A. C. Syfert, Bethany, Okla.

David Hinsaw, veteran New York Republican national leader, said the 1936 Republican platform authors would attempt to write the world's fifth "lasting human device to provide economic opportunity and equality for the individual."

The only other four which are "lasting," he said, are the Ten Commandments of "The Hebrew Republic," the Sermon on the Mount, the Magna Charta and the American Constitution.

G.O.P. in South Picks Replogle For Runner-Up

Rich Floridian Groomed By Chiefs Seeking Recognition for Section.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 7.—Republican leaders in the South, seeking recognition for that section, today are rallying to the support of J. Leonard Replogle, wealthy Florida resident, for the Vice Presidential nomination.

Headquarters for Replogle are established in a hotel across from Cleveland's city auditorium, where the national convention will be opened Tuesday.

Mrs. Myra Brown, of Tampa, Florida National Committeewoman, is supporting Replogle and said today that 12 Southern States probably would vote solidly for him. These States have 187 convention votes.

Caucus Set for Tonight.

Replogle's candidacy will have a prominent place tomorrow night, when the Southerners caucus to map plans for an expansion of two-party government in the South.

His campaign headquarters said he had been promised votes from Pennsylvania and other Northern States. He lived in Pennsylvania when he was engaged in the steel business.

R. B. Creager, Texas National Committeeman and chairman of the Southern conference of the party—organized at the 1932 national convention in Chicago—has called the caucus for 7:30 p. m.

Republicans from the South, Creager said, desire to run their own campaigns independent of other sections.

At present the Republican campaign is run from Eastern headquarters in New York, in the West from Chicago, and also from Washington.

Creager said the Southerners, because of their geographic location and peculiar set-up, want to have their own headquarters.

Only the delegates and alternates from Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky are to attend the caucus. Admission will be by their convention credentials.

Fire Sweeps City Block

Schenectady, N. Y., June 7 (U.P.).—Fire swept over a city block late today, causing damage estimated at more than $500,000. Two warehouses and two houses were destroyed, and two bakery buildings damaged. The fire was reported the worst in the history of the city. Two firemen were hurt.

Delegate Declares Indiana for Landon

Cleveland, June 7 (AP).—A. H. Beardsley, of Elkhart, Ind., member of the Indiana delegation to the Republican National Convention, said tonight the bulk of the State's 28 votes would go to Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas on the convention's first roll call for a Presidential nomination.

Beardsley said he had discussed the nomination with such leaders of the party in Indiana as former Senator James E. Watson, National committeeman George Ball, of Muncie, Ind., and former Gov. James P. Goodrich.

"It is the consensus of the delegation that the State will go for Landon on the first ballot," said Beardsley, "and the nomination won't be delayed longer than two ballots."

Eight of Indiana's convention votes are instructed for the Kansas executive.

Ickes Assails Landon's Record as Colorless, Asserts Hearst Will Rule Convention

New Deal Step To Halt Kansan Seen in Attack

Secretary Says Governor Is Choice of 'Interests' That Named Harding.

By William V. Nessly.

Despite the wave of protest that followed Postmaster General Farley's opening attack on Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, outstanding candidate for the nomination against President Roosevelt, another high Administration figure, Secretary of Interior Ickes, last night continued the attack on the Kansan in advance of his expected nomination at the Cleveland convention this week.

Ickes, a former Republican and Bull Mooser, pictured Gov. Landon, in a radio speech, as having been selected in advance as the Republican nominee "by substantially the same interests that selected Candidate Harding at Chicago in 1920." He referred to the Kansas executive as "that man whose record is the most colorless, whose views on the burning issues of the day are the least known, and whose convictions are the most accommodating."

Apparently aligning the Administration more definitely in the "stop Landon" movement, even before the nominating convention opens, Ickes declared the covention will be controlled by William Randolph Hearst, "discoverer and principal backer of Gov. Landon," who will also "do the final editing of the platform draft."

The Cabinet member declared the views of William Allen White, Gifford Pinchot and former Gov. Frank Lowden of Illinois will be disregarded as, he contended, they had been in the past.

To "Sign on Line."

"The platform," he asserted, "drafted by a few men and approved in advance by the same interests that have controlled the Republican Party sonce the days of Theodore Roosevelt, already has been prepared.

"All that the convention will be expected or permitted to do will be to sign, as usual, on the dotted line.

"And, also typical as it is of the Republican Party, graciously the convention will be given an opportunity to indorse that candidate who likewise has been selected in advance; not this time, however, by a group of gentlemen who know exactly what they want, meeting at midnight in a smoke-filled hotel room, but chosen in advance just the same and by substantially the same interests that selected Candidate Harding at Chicago in 1920.

"The 1936 Republican Convention will be remindful of the one of 1920 in still another respect. The Chicago gathering in the earlier year was merely a marionette show, the strings controlling the principal actors of which were held in the hands of Boss Boise Penrose, as he lay ill on his bed in Philadelphia.

"The convention about to open will also be controlled by an absentee boss, who, in this instance, will be William Randolph Hearst."

The Interior Secretary declared the Republican platform would be "the result of the mesalliance between the Republican Party and the Liberty League," with former President Hooveer as the "obstetrician," Col. Frank Knox "the orthopedist," Jouett Shouse, president of the Liberty League, "wet nurse," and Senator Borah to supply "an anti-monopoly bib as well as a tucker to protect against the chilling blasts of foreign alliances."

Predicts Hoover Demand.

He predicted that Hoover "will demand a personal indorsement" and said much tact and diplomacy will be required in drafting the platform.

Speaking of "the irreconcilable views of Mr. Hoover, of Mr. Borah, of Mr. Mills, of Mr. Pinchot, of Mr. Mellon, of Mr. Lowden, of the Young Republicans of New York State and of the liberty-loving Du Ponts," Ickes asked what the Cleveland platform would say about wage regulation, the gold standard, budget balancing and relief, social security, farm benefit payments.

Ickes said it would be "interesting" to see how the convention dealt with the matter of minimum wages and maximum hours in view of the recent Supreme Court ruling last Monday against the New York law.

"It may be," he said, "that the Republican National Convention, following the lead of the Young Republicans of New York State, who adopted a platform on May 16, would like to make such a friendly gesture to the wage earners of the country, as would be implicit in a plank advocating a law establishing minimum wages and maximum hours.

"On the other hand, if the platform is to be consistent with the expressions of Republican and Liberty League leaders, it will have to be silent on this important question or it will have to declare its adherence to the principle announced by the Supreme Court."

The national Democratic organization first publicly recognized Gov. Landon as the probable nominee of the Republicans for President when, on May 20, Farley, as Democratic national chairman, turned the party guns on Landon at the Michigan State Democratic convention.

While not naming Landon, Farley referred to him as "the Governor of a typical prairie State," and declared that Landon, despite his two terms as Governor of Kansas, was "destitute of experience."

G.O.P. Notables By Mrs. Bolton At Party Given

Senator and Mrs. Hastings Among Guests at Cleveland Function.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 7.—A tea party by Mrs. Chester Bolton, a new committeewoman from Kansas, and another precedent broken by Ruth Hanna McCormick Simms were today's contributions from women of the Republican National Convention.

Landon headquarters was humming with the name of Mrs. Ralph Harris, of Ottawa, publisher with her sons of three Kansas papers and just elected John Hamilton's coworker on the Republican National Committee.

All members of the national and local committees were at the home of Representative Chester K. Bolton, where Mrs. Bolton had as house guests Senator Hastings, of Delaware, and Mrs. Hastings; Representative Bacon, of New York, and Mrs. Bacon, and a dozen others.

Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, in her home State and a delegate-at-large on the ticket of Robert Taft, had a hotel suite adjoining that of Mrs. Simms. Mrs. Dolly Gann had reservations with Kansans at the hotel housing Landon headquarters.

In 1918, Mrs. Simms was the first woman appointed to take charge of women's activities in the Republican National Committee. She came here to the bailwick of her father, Mark Hanna, as chairman of her New Mexico delegation, first woman ever to have that job.

Wives of the men who have been mentioned as Presidential candidates mostly were not here. Lawrence Richey, former secretary of Herbert Hoover, reported his old chief would be here one day only, with his son Alan. Mrs. Hoover wouldn't come. Mrs. Borah stayed in Washington. The Landons were at Topeka. Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg was expected today.

Women's Vote

mittee, was asked why women were slipping politically, he replied with his customary frankness:

"Because they won't work. Back in 1920 and 1924 we used to appoint them in order to encourage them and because we thought they would be a real help. In 1928, as a matter of fact, the women worked hard. But since then they seem to have lost interest."

In other words, women in politics are not up-hill fighters. In 1928, when the prospects were bright, many of them took a fling at the game, but they still lack that deep interest in the political struggle which makes for continuity of interest and effort. And without continuity, without that day-in-and-out stick-to-itiveness, there is no such thing as success in politics.

Nor can the women blame this situation on the men. Gleason has no doubt been guilty of some exaggeration when he states that the Republican leaders have done what they could to encourage the female politician, but on the other hand, politeness plays no role in the political game, and any permanent position which women achieve in that hard-hitting sport must be won on merit and merit alone. The woman who can command votes will also command the rewards, not because the men want to recognize her, but because they must.

The only outstanding example of this kind of hard-won recognition among the women delegates is Mrs. Ruth Hanna Simms, formerly of Illinois, and now (since her marriage to Albert H. Simms), of New Mexico. In spite of the fact that this daughter of Mark Hanna had to begin her political career all over again in a new environment, it has only taken her a few years to bob right up again among the delegates of her new State.

In the light of the defeatist situation among the women in Republican Party ranks, it is interesting to study the large and numerous women's lobbies with which Cleveland is cluttered.

My article tomorrow will describe these lobbies, their aims and methods and attempt to answer the question: "Why a women's lobby, anyway?"

Virginians Hold Caucus Today At Cleveland

'Open Mind' Prevails Amid Majority of Group, Says Chairman.

Cleveland, June 7.—Virginia's 17 delegates to the Republican National Convention will hold a caucus here tomorrow morning.

Any discussion of whom the Old Dominion delegation should support for the Presidentail nomination is considered certain to stir up conflict.

Four of the 17 delegates in the Virginia group are pledged to Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas. The others are uninstructed. Among them are supporters of nearly every man who has been mentioned for the honor.

H. C. McCormac, of Winchester, chairman, said tonight:

"The majority of the Virginia delegation has an open mind, and I expect that it will be as late as Wednesday before sentiment crystalizes."

The Republican State convention, held in Roanoke six weeks ago, indorsed Gov. Landon, but did not instruct its delegates to vote for him. Two County conventions, however, did instruct its delegates to vote for him. They were the four delegates from the Eighth and Ninth Districts.

The statement tonight by several members of the Virginia delegation that the majority of the delegates were "on the fence" was disputed by National Committeeman Joseph L. Crupper, of Rosslyn. At least 12 of the 17 delegates, Crupper said, are for Gov. Landon.

On the other hand, Maj. Henry A. Wise, of Kiptopeke, delegate at large, said he had not been able to find more than five Landonites in the Virginia delegation. And that, he said, included the four who were instructed for Landon.

For Herbert Hoover.

Former Represtnative Menalcus Lankford, of Norfolk, said he would like to have the privilege of voting for ormer President Herbert Hoover. He was elected on the Hoover landslide of 1928.

State Senator Thomas J. Wilson, jr., of Clifton Forge, said he liked Col. Frank Knox, Chicago publisher.

"Under circumstances as they are today," said Senator Wilson, "I would vote for Knox because he is a two-fisted man who has the courage to say what he thinks about the New Deal."

About half the Virginia delegations is here. The remainder for the most part, are en route by automobile. Their headquarters is the Carter Hotel.

Firebug Sought As Six Blazes Kill One, Hurt 9

'Alcoholic Pyromaniac' Is Hunted in New York; Woman, 62, Dies.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—An "alcoholic pyromaniac" whose operations have brought recurrent terror for several weeks, was sought today as six more incendiary fires, in which one person died and nine were injured, were chalked up against him.

First reported were two fires in the crowded Bronx. Trapped in one of the burning buildings Mrs. Sarah Siegel, 62, dropped her 13-year-old granddaughter from a third-floor window and then herself plunged to the ground, her night clothing aflame. The grandmother died; the child, Rhoda Fiber, was injured seriously.

Scarcely had more than 100 policemen started beating through the Bronx than the search was extended to Manhattan, where four fires occurred, resulting in injuries to Mrs. Pauline Stricker, 30; her daughter, Dorothy, 11, and Peter Statako, 15.

In the fire in which Mrs. Siegel lost her life, the flames shot up through a dumbwaiter shaft and mushroomed under the roof at the Siegel home, trapping Mrs. Siegel and her granddaughter in their apartment.

Two firemen were injured fighting the blaze. A policeman was overcome by smoke.

Jean Roberts, 14, occupant of the building, suffered minor burns, and Mrs. K. Goss, 65, in a nearby building, collapsed from shock.

The blaze was discovered while firemen were fighting another suspicious fire a short distance away, which was quickly extinguished.

Gov. Earle Calls Clan Example Of New Fascism

Says G. O. P. Industrialists Are to Blame for Black Legion.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 7.—A charge by Democratic Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania that the Black Legion is "an example of the new fascism" confronted political circles today as the State pressed its investigations on three fronts.

The young New Deal Governor of Pennsylvania, where a new inquiry into Black Legion activities has begun, blamed "Republican industrialists" for the terrorist society in a speech last night before a large crowd at a congressional ball in the naval armory here.

"The Black Legion," Earle asserted, "is an example of the new fascism, preying on ignorance and petty human vanity, spawning in the diseased minds of fanatics and bigots."

Two grand juries were to sift evidence this week of floggings, killings and terrorism by the hooded, black-robed night riders and Prosecutor Duncan C. McCrea, of Wayne (Detroit) County, continued his investigations.

Circuit Court Judge James E. Chenot, sitting as a one-man grand jury, will resume hearing testimony here tomorrow. At Pontiac, a grand jury inquest into the secret order will open at the request of Buell A. Doelle, an assistant attorney general.

Investigators have reported that the Black Legion, which required its members to swear to fight communism, masked as the "Wolverine Republican Club" for some meetings here.

Republican officials disclaimed affiliation with the group, however, and asserted the terrorist order was being made a "sounding board" for political orators.

Injecting politics into his speech, Earle told his audience:

"I was United States Minister to Austria in 1933 and 1934. I saw for myself for fascism and nabi-ism are born furtively in the dark; how they develop through just such organizations as the Black Legion, distorting prejudices, rousing passions, making a mockery of the truth, finally bursting forth into violence and bloodshed.

"I say to you that the money changers and the great industrialists behind the American Liberty League and the present Republican Party can not escape responsibility for this creature."

M. C. Crea, who suspended one of his investigators, N. Ray Markland, on information he attended a Black Legion meeting, has assigned four other aids to the case.

The prosecutor has charged 15 men, now under arrest, with murder in connection with the shooting of Charles A. Poole, a WPA worker whose death put the police on the trail of the Black Legion.

Bank Bandits Hit Slump; Insurance Rates Will Be Cut

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—So uneconomic has the bank robber's business become, the National Bureau of Casualty and Survey Underwriters announced today, that tomorrow rates of insurance against such criminals are coming down by 20 per cent in 35 States.

The reduction, said the Bureau, will mean a saving of nearly $250,000 annually to insured banks.

The improvement in the situation was attributed by the bureau to two reasons: First, a rule, promulgated two years ago, requiring banks to keep 85 per cent of their insured money under delayed time lock; and second, the "increased activities of the various law enforcement agencies, particularly those of the United States Department of Justice," which have made bank robbery "an increasingly undesirable business."

Not sharing in the rate reduction are New York, the New England States, Pennsylvania, Delaware, West Virginia and the District of Columbia—because, said the announcement, they already get the lowest available rate and have had continued "favorable experience" with thugs.

Ickes Assails Landon's Record as Colorless, Asserts Hearst Will Rule Convention

New Deal Step To Halt Kansan Seen in Attack

Secretary Says Governor Is Choice of 'Interests' That Named Harding.

By William V. Nessly.

Despite the wave of protest that followed Postmaster General Farley's opening attack on Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, outstanding candidate for the nomination against President Roosevelt, another high Administration figure, Secretary of Interior Ickes, last night continued the attack on the Kansan in advance of his expected nomination at the Cleveland convention this week.

Ickes, a former Republican and Bull Mooser, pictured Gov. Landon, in a radio speech, as having been selected in advance as the Republican nominee "by substantially the same interests that selected Candidate Harding at Chicago in 1920." He referred to the Kansas executive as "that man whose record is the most colorless, whose views on the burning issues of the day are the least known, and whose convictions are the most accommodating."

Apparently aligning the Administration more definitely in the "stop Landon" movement, even before the nominating convention opens, Ickes declared the covention will be controlled by William Randolph Hearst, "discoverer and principal backer of Gov. Landon," who will also "do the final editing of the platform draft."

The Cabinet member declared the views of William Allen White, Gifford Pinchot and former Gov. Frank Lowden of Illinois will be disregarded as, he contended, they had been in the past.

To "Sign on Line."

"The platform," he asserted, "drafted by a few men and approved in advance by the same interests that have controlled the Republican Party sonce the days of Theodore Roosevelt, already has been prepared.

"All that the convention will be expected or permitted to do will be to sign, as usual, on the dotted line.

"And, also typical as it is of the Republican Party, graciously the convention will be given an opportunity to indorse that candidate who likewise has been selected in advance; not this time, however, by a group of gentlemen who know exactly what they want, meeting at midnight in a smoke-filled hotel room, but chosen in advance just the same and by substantially the same interests that selected Candidate Harding at Chicago in 1920.

"The 1936 Republican Convention will be remindful of the one of 1920 in still another respect. The Chicago gathering in the earlier year was merely a marionette show, the strings controlling the principal actors of which were held in the hands of Boss Boise Penrose, as he lay ill on his bed in Philadelphia.

"The convention about to open will also be controlled by an absentee boss, who, in this instance, will be William Randolph Hearst."

The Interior Secretary declared the Republican platform would be "the result of the mesalliance between the Republican Party and the Liberty League," with former President Hoover as the "obstetrician," Col. Frank Knox "the orthopedist," Jouett Shouse, president of the Liberty League, "wet nurse," and Senator Borah to supply "an anti-monopoly bib as well as a tucker to protect against the chilling blasts of foreign alliances."

Predicts Hoover Demand.

He predicted that Hoover "will demand a personal indorsement" and said much tact and diplomacy will be required in drafting the platform.

Speaking of "the irreconcilable views of Mr. Hoover, of Mr. Borah, of Mr. Mills, of Mr. Pinchot, of Mr. Mellon, of Mr. Lowden, of the Young Republicans of New York State and of the liberty-loving Du Ponts," Ickes asked what the Cleveland platform would say about wage regulation, the gold standard, budget balancing and relief, social security, farm benefit payments.

Ickes said it would be "interesting" to see how the convention dealt with the matter of minimum wages and maximum hours in view of the recent Supreme Court ruling last Monday against the New York law.

"It may be," he said, "that the Republican National Convention, following the lead of the Young Republicans of New York State, who adopted a platform on May 16, would like to make such a friendly gesture to the wage earners of the country, as would be implicit in a plank advocating a law establishing minimum wages and maximum hours.

"On the other hand, if the platform is to be consistent with the expressions of Republican and Liberty League leaders, it will have to be silent on this important question or it will have to declare its adherence to the principle announced by the Supreme Court."

The national Democratic organization first publicly recognized Gov. Landon as the probable nominee of the Republicans for President when, on May 20, Farley, as Democratic national chairman, turned the party guns on Landon at the Michigan State Democratic convention.

While not naming Landon, Farley referred to him as "the Governor of a typical prairie State," and declared that Landon, despite his two terms as Governor of Kansas, was "destitute of experience."

G.O.P. Notables By Mrs. Bolton At Party Given

Senator and Mrs. Hastings Among Guests at Cleveland Function.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 7.—A tea party by Mrs. Chester Bolton, a new committeewoman from Kansas, and another precedent broken by Ruth Hanna McCormick Simms were today's contributions from women of the Republican National Convention.

Landon headquarters was humming with the name of Mrs. Ralph Harris, of Ottawa, publisher with her sons of three Kansas papers and just elected John Hamilton's coworker on the Republican National Committee.

All members of the national and local committees were at the home of Representative Chester K. Bolton, where Mrs. Bolton had as house guests Senator Hastings, of Delaware, and Mrs. Hastings; Representative Bacon, of New York, and Mrs. Bacon, and a dozen others.

Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, in her home State and a delegate-at-large on the ticket of Robert Taft, had a hotel suite adjoining that of Mrs. Simms. Mrs. Dolly Gann had reservations with Kansans at the hotel housing Landon headquarters.

In 1918, Mrs. Simms was the first woman appointed to take charge of women's activities in the Republican National Committee. She came here to the bailwick of her father, Mark Hanna, as chairman of her New Mexico delegation, first woman ever to have that job.

Wives of the men who have been mentioned as Presidential candidates mostly were not here. Lawrence Richey, former secretary of Herbert Hoover, reported his old chief would be here one day only, with his son Alan. Mrs. Hoover wouldn't come. Mrs. Borah stayed in Washington. The Landons were at Topeka. Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg was expected today.

Women's Vote

mittee, was asked why women were slipping politically, he replied with his customary frankness:

"Because they won't work. Back in 1920 and 1924 we used to appoint them in order to encourage them and because we thought they would be a real help. In 1928, as a matter of fact, the women worked hard. But since then they seem to have lost interest."

In other words, women in politics are not up-hill fighters. In 1928, when the prospects were bright, many of them took a fling at the game, but they still lack that deep interest in the political struggle which makes for continuity of interest and effort. And without continuity, without that day-in-and-out stick-to-itiveness, there is no such thing as success in politics.

Nor can the women blame this situation on the men. Gleason has no doubt been guilty of some exaggeration when he states that the Republican leaders have done what they could to encourage the female politician, but on the other hand, politeness plays no role in the political game, and any permanent position which women achieve in that hard-hitting sport must be won on merit and merit alone. The woman who can command votes will also command the rewards, not because the men want to recognize her, but because they must.

The only outstanding example of this kind of hard-won recognition among the women delegates is Mrs. Ruth Hanna Simms, formerly of Illinois, and now (since her marriage to Albert H. Simms), of New Mexico. In spite of the fact that this daughter of Mark Hanna had to begin her political career all over again in a new environment, it has only taken her a few years to bob right up again among the delegates of her new State.

In the light of the defeatist situation among the women in Republican Party ranks, it is interesting to study the large and numerous women's lobbies with which Cleveland is cluttered.

My article tomorrow will describe these lobbies, their aims and methods and attempt to answer the question: "Why a women's lobby, anyway?"

Virginians Hold Caucus Today At Cleveland

'Open Mind' Prevails Amid Majority of Group, Says Chairman.

Cleveland, June 7.—Virginia's 17 delegates to the Republican National Convention will hold a caucus here tomorrow morning.

Any discussion of whom the Old Dominion delegation should support for the Presidentail nomination is considered certain to stir up conflict.

Four of the 17 delegates in the Virginia group are pledged to Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas. The others are uninstructed. Among them are supporters of nearly every man who has been mentioned for the honor.

H. C. McCormac, of Winchester, chairman, said tonight:

"The majority of the Virginia delegation has an open mind, and I expect that it will be as late as Wednesday before sentiment crystalizes."

The Republican State convention, held in Roanoke six weeks ago, indorsed Gov. Landon, but did not instruct its delegates to vote for him. Two County conventions, however, did instruct its delegates to vote for him. They were the four delegates from the Eighth and Ninth Districts.

The statement tonight by several members of the Virginia delegation that the majority of the delegates were "on the fence" was disputed by National Committeeman Joseph L. Crupper, of Rosslyn. At least 12 of the 17 delegates, Crupper said, are for Gov. Landon.

On the other hand, Maj. Henry A. Wise, of Kiptopeke, delegate at large, said he had not been able to find more than five Landonites in the Virginia delegation. And that, he said, included the four who were instructed for Landon.

For Herbert Hoover.

Former Represetnative Menalcus Lankford, of Norfolk, said he would like to have the privilege of voting for ormer President Herbert Hoover. He was elected on the Hoover landslide of 1928.

State Senator Thomas J. Wilson, jr., of Clifton Forge, said he liked Col. Frank Knox, Chicago publisher.

"Under circumstances as they are today," said Senator Wilson, "I would vote for Knox because he is a two-fisted man who has the courage to say what he thinks about the New Deal."

About half the Virginia delegations is here. The remainder for the most part, are en route by automobile. Their headquarters is the Carter Hotel.

Firebug Sought As Six Blazes Kill One, Hurt 9

'Alcoholic Pyromaniac' Is Hunted in New York; Woman, 62, Dies.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—An "alcoholic pyromaniac" whose operations have brought recurrent terror for several weeks, was sought today as six more incendiary fires, in which one person died and nine were injured, were chalked up against him.

First reported were two fires in the crowded Bronx. Trapped in one of the burning buildings Mrs. Sarah Siegel, 62, dropped her 13-year-old granddaughter from a third-floor window and then herself plunged to the ground, her night clothing aflame. The grandmother died; the child, Rhoda Fiber, was injured seriously.

Scarcely had more than 100 policemen started beating through the Bronx than the search was extended to Manhattan, where four fires occurred, resulting in injuries to Mrs. Pauline Stricker, 30; her daughter, Dorothy, 11, and Peter Statako, 15.

In the fire in which Mrs. Siegel lost her life, the flames shot up through a dumbwaiter shaft and mushroomed under the roof at the Siegel home, trapping Mrs. Siegel and her granddaughter in their apartment.

Two firemen were injured fighting the blaze. A policeman was overcome by smoke.

Jean Roberts, 14, occupant of the building, suffered minor burns, and Mrs. K. Goas, 65, in a nearby building, collapsed from shock.

The blaze was discovered while firemen were fighting another suspicious fire a short distance away, which was quickly extinguished.

Gov. Earle Calls Clan Example Of New Fascism

Says G. O. P. Industrialists Are to Blame for Black Legion.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, June 7.—A charge by Democratic Gov. George H. Earle of Pennsylvania that the Black Legion is "an example of the new fascism" confronted political circles today as the State pressed its investigations on three fronts.

The young New Deal Governor of Pennsylvania, where a new inquiry into Black Legion activities has begun, blamed "Republican industrialists" for the terrorist society in a speech last night before a large crowd at a congressional ball in the naval armory here.

"The Black Legion," Earle asserted, "is an example of the new fascism, preying on ignorance and petty human vanity, spawning in the diseased minds of fanatics and bigots."

Two grand juries were to sift evidence this week of floggings, killings and terrorism by the hooded, black-robed night riders and Prosecutor Duncan C. McCrea, of Wayne (Detroit) County, continued his investigations.

Circuit Court Judge James E. Chenot, sitting as a one-man grand jury, will resume hearing testimony here tomorrow. At Pontiac, a grand jury inquest into the secret order will open at the request of Buell A. Doelle, an assistant attorney general.

Investigators have reported that the Black Legion, which required its members to swear to fight communism, masked as the "Wolverine Republican Club" for some meetings here.

Republican officials disclaimed affiliation with the group, however, and asserted the terrorist order was being made a "sounding board" for political orators.

Injecting politics into his speech, Earle told his audience:

"I was United States Minister to Austria in 1933 and 1934. I saw for myself for fascism and nabi-ism are born furtively in the dark; how they develop through just such organizations as the Black Legion, distorting prejudices, rousing passions, making a mockery of the truth, finally bursting forth into violence and bloodshed.

"I say to you that the money changers and the great industrialists behind the American Liberty League and the present Republican Party can not escape responsibility for this creature."

M. C. Crea, who suspended one of his investigators, N. Ray Markland, on information he attended a Black Legion meeting, has assigned four other aids to the case.

The prosecutor has charged 15 men, now under arrest, with murder in connection with the shooting of Charles A. Poole, a WPA worker whose death put the police on the trail of the Black Legion.

Bank Bandits Hit Slump; Insurance Rates Will Be Cut

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—So uneconomic has the bank robber's business become, the National Bureau of Casualty and Survey Underwriters announced today, that tomorrow rates of insurance against such criminals are coming down by 20 per cent in 35 States.

The reduction, said the Bureau, will mean a saving of nearly $250,000 annually to insured banks.

The improvement in the situation was attributed by the bureau to two reasons: First, a rule, promulgated two years ago, requiring banks to keep 65 per cent of their insured money under delayed time lock; and second, the "increased activities of the various law enforcement agencies, particularly those of the United States Department of Justice," which have made bank robbery "an increasingly undesirable business."

Not sharing in the rate reduction are New York, the New England States, Pennsylvania, Delaware, West Virginia and the District of Columbia—because, said the announcement, they already get the lowest available rate and have had continued "favorable experience" with thugs.

Georgetown's Class Is Urged To Help Nation

Dr. Walsh Stresses Duties to Government in Its Present Crisis.

America can survive its "third great crisis" only if today's college graduate considers it a civic duty to fight the sickness that has come of popular government, Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University, told 475 graduates of the school at their commencement last night.

The address came as the climax to a colorful ceremony in which the university graduated its 137th class.

Dr. Walsh, the commencement orator, who is a noted author and lecturer, was, himself the recipient of a degree. The honorary degree of doctor of literature was conferred upos him by the Rev. Arthur O'Leary, university president.

There was one other honorary degree awarded. The degree of doctor of science was conferred upon Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the United States.

Dr. Walsh, in recommending full participation in civic affairs, made two proposals for solving America's social and economic problems.

He advocated establishment of "a true economic council, composed of representatives from all occupations," to draw up legislation "for the good of all people." He urged, secondly, a "labor shares" system, by which labor would share more fully in capital profits.

"The day on which the occupational form of representation is definitely and successfully established in the United States will rank with July 4, 1776," Dr. Walsh predicted, "and the day on which 'labor shares' become universally and voluntarily adopted in the constitution of American industry will mark the end of communism's advance."

The "Declaration of Dependence," to come with the dawn of this new day, will produce a psychological reaction equal in its effects, Dr. Walsh said, "to the electrifying influence of that other declaration on the political thought of the eighteenth century.

"For even the unfinished work of Washington and Jefferson and the other founding fathers would be completed."

The problems facing the Nation today, the speaker pointed out, go beyond the borders of poltical party lines. Both of the major parties have in the "heyday of their exuberance" been guilty of economic folly and unsocial proclivities.

"Neither were Galahads when it was popular or profitable to be Machiavellis," he declared.

"It is the civic duty of educated gentlemen to remain above the Billingsgate of partisanry and grapple directly with the historic and moral causes that have brought democracy in America to the sickness that sooner or later afflicts every form of popular government."

America met its first crisis, Dr. Walsh said, with the founding of the Constitution in 1789. Seventy years later, the question of slavery and States' rights brought the second crisis, which was settled by the Civil War.

In the morning, the faculties and seniors assembled in Dahlgren chapel for the baccalaureate mass and sermon, preached by a graduate of the college, the Rev. Louis M. O'Leary, class of 1926, now of the Dominican Order of Preachers and an instructor of sacred eloquence at the Catholic University.

Members of the Georgetown faculty officiated at the mass, the Rev. John J. Toohey, S. J., professor of philosophy and religion being the celebrant. Music was furnished by the choir, under the direction of Dr. Edward P. Donovan.

Assisting in the mass were the Rev. Charles J. Foley, S. J., deacon; the Rev. Kenneth L. Graham, S. J., subdeacon, and the Rev. A. M. Torre, S. J., master of ceremonies.

At the commencement exercises, Lieut. Col. Raymond O. Barton, professor of military science and tactics in the R. O. T. C., presented commissions of second lieutenants of Infantry in the Organized Reserves of the Army as follows: Francis A. Ainsa, Vincent F. Beatty, Joseph S. Finley, Newton A. Free, James McD. Gallagher, David Horowitz, Arthur R. Kenedy, James S. Kerman, jr., Donald W. Lamm, Philip J. Monaghan, Joseph M. Nurre, jr., John G. O'Brien, John J. O'Connor, George A. Perlitz, Marlin S. McAvoy and John D. Weller on completion of the training camp course this summer.

Work Speeded On Preparation Of Bonus Pay

24-Hour Schedule in Force at Treasury to Insure Delivery on June 15.

Hundreds of Treasury Department employes last night went into the third week of working on a 24-hour basis preparing bonus bonds for distribution to World War veterans.

The bonds and checks will start moving from a dozen central postoffices on June 15 to the more than 3,000,000 veterans whose adjusted service certificates Congress voted to cash immediately.

The bonds are being sent to the postoffices as fast as they are ready; to be held for delivery a week from today. Approximateely 100,000 "glass-window" envelopes containing bonds, checks and a copy of regulations for cashing the bonds already have been turned over to the Washington postoffice.

The regulations explain that the veteran may cash his allotment of $50 bonds by presenting them to any postoffice or by sending them to the Treasury with proper identification. In either case, a check will be mailed him promptly on receipt of his request for payment. The checks mailed with the $50 binds are for the fractional part of the bonus due.

Only bonds and checks for those veterans living in the Richmond Federal Reserve District or whose certificates were held here on account of loans against them are being prepared in Washington. Others will be mailed from the 1 other Federal reserve headquarters.

Entente Warns Austria to Shun Hapsburg Move

Admonition Is Given After Buchares Talk by Heads of Three Najons.

By the Associated Press.

Bucharest, Rumania, June 7.—Leaders of the Little Entente again warned Austria today against restoration of the Hapsburg monarchy and union with Germany.

The admonition came after a four-hour conference at Screviste Castle of diplomats of the Entente—Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania.

The participants included Prince Paul, regent of Yugoslavia; President Eduard Benes of Czechoslovakia; King Carol of Rumania; George Tatarescu, Premier of Rumania; Nicholas Titulescu, Rumania foreign minister, and Dr. Kamil Krofta, foreign minister of Czechoslovakia.

Their communique said they had examined problems of the Little Entente with a unified viewpoint and agreed Austria should remain independent.

Extreme police precautions were taken to prevent any trouble along the be-flagged Bucharest streets through which the diplomats had to travel on their 25-mile auto journey to the castle.

Stand Taken Years Ago.

The little entente nations—parts of which were included, up to the end of the World War, in the Austro-Hungarian empire—long ago expressed open opposition to restoration of the monarchy in Austria.

Archduke Otto of Hapsburg, exiled heir to the throne, recently appealed to Austrians to restore the monarchy. French officials said they believed Prince Ernst Rudiger von Strahemberg, recently ousted as vice chancellor of Austria, was behind the latest move for enthroning Otto in an attempt to create trouble for Chancellor Schuschnigg, who removed Strahemberg from power.

France, these officials said, would support its little entente allies in "whatever action" those nations determined to take if Otto should return despite their opposition.

These sources, expressing disbelief of reports that Premier Musolini of Italy and Schuschnigg had come to an agreement for a Hapsburg restoration, said both the Italian and Austrian leaders "fully understood" the Little Entente would fight to oppose restoration.

Otto Demands Action.

London, June 7 (U.P.).—Archduke Otto, pretender to the Austrian throne, demanded immediate restoration of the Hapsburg dynasty in a letter to authorities in the village of Munster, which recently elected him an honorary citizen, the Daily Herald's correspondent at Vienna reported tonight.

"It is high time for decisive action," Otto was quoted as saying in the letter.

"I alone represent the legitimist principle established by God above all struggles and rivalries."

Otto is now in exile with his mother, Empress Zita, in Steenockerzeel Castle, Belgnum.

The letter was published in a Monarchist newspaper. It was quoted as saying:

"Because of a lack of supreme power, there is a continued struggle for power within the state. Concentration of all forces is needed.

"I could accept the position with the help of God, for I derive the title from no single group."

Sir John Fraser, Noted Writer, Dies

By the Associated Press.

London, June 7.—Sir John Foster Fraser, 67, noted writer on current events, died today. It was claimed he had more than 3,000,000 readers every Sunday.

In 1918 Sir John participated in the Liberty Loan Drive in the United States, delivering lectures nightly. He was knighted in 1917.

Fraser, the son of an Edinburgh minister, gained his education, in his own words, when "turned loose in a library for some years." He did newspaper work in Nottingham, Sheffield and Manchester before coming to London in 1892, where he became a Parliamentary reporter.

He spent the winter of 1895-96 roaming the Mediterranean coast on freighters. That summer he went around the world with a bicycle, with two others covering 19,237 miles in 774 days. The party traveled through 17 countries. In 1901 he made a dash across Manchuria, at that time closed to foreigners.

In subsequent years his newspaper work took him to the United States, Canada, the Balkan States, Russia, Panama and Argentina. In 1910 he made a journey across a section of the Sahara Desert by camel.

25,000 Troops March in Rome Before Royalty

Full War Equipment Is Carried by Blackshirts; Il Duce Absent.

By the United Press.

Rome, June 7.—A portion of the armed might of imperial Italy was paraded along historic Empire Way today as a warning to the world that the Fascist nation is prepared for any eventuality.

King Victor Emanuel, Queen Helena and Marshal Pietro Badoglio, viceroy of Ethiopia and restorer of the empire, reviewed the colorful and significant parade.

Twenty-five thousand troops, in full war pack, marching almost at the double-quick to keep pace with new and powerful mechanized units, representing every division of the Italian army, impressed observers with Italy's unprecedented war preparedness.

Premier Mussolini did not witness the parade as he is spending the week-end at Forli, following an important conference with Austrian Chancellor Kurt von Schuschnigg. Momentous developments, which may rock Europe as deeply as Germany's reoccupation of the Rhineland, were expected to result from Il Duce's talk with Schuschnigg. Restoration of the royal house of Austria under Italian military protection was the most-discussed possibility.

In the light of that, today's demonstration of Italy's military power was all the more significant.

The official reason for the parade was celebration of annual constitution day. 800 armed trucks, 80 tanks, 2,000 horses, 300 machine gun batteries, 150 cannon and 100 trench mortars passed before the royal box in addition to the 25,000 infantrymen and 1,500 officers.

It was estimated that these forces represented slightly less than 2 per cent of Italy's standing military strength.

The celebration had all the appearances of being a great Roman triumph for Marshal Badoglio, hero of Italy's conquest of Ethiopia.

With France occupied by internal troubles and England growing increasingly alarmed over the situation in the Far East, Italians believe the Italo-Ethiopian problem may recede in importance and that sanctions soon will cease to exist by general tacit consent.

3 Hurt in Plane Crash; 2 Escape in Another

New York, June 7. (AP).—Three persons were injured today in an airplane collision at Flushing, Long Island, while two occupants of another craft smashed in a forced landing escaped.

In the Flushing accident, which occurred as two planes attempted to take off, Pilot Charles Hains suffered a leg fracture; Pilot William Trilling, of the other plane, and his passenger, Louis Levat, suffered minor injuries.

In a forced landing on Staten Island, Pilot Harry Abrins, of Stapleton, and his companion, Joseph Zimmerman, crawled from the wreckage before the craft took fire.

Historic Church Razed By Fire After Storm

Harrisville, Va., June 7 (AP).—Historic St. John's Reformed Church was destroyed by fire this afternoon after being struck by lightning during an electrical storm.

The history of the church dates back over 100 years when the Reformed and Lutheran congregations jointly owned and occupied Freiden's Church near Mount Olive. The building which was burned this afternoon was built in 1876, being dedicated July 8 of that year. Its sixtieth anniversary was observed May 24.

Coast Guard Plane Flies to Ill Sailor

Cape May, N. J., June 7 (U.P.).—Lieut. Luke Christopher, of the Coast Guard air station, took off tonight to go to the aid of an ailing sailor aboard the S. S. Matagalpa and transport him to the Marine Hosuital at Norfolk.

The ship, a freighter running from New Orleans to Baltimore, was in Chesapeake Bay, about 30 miles from Cape Charles, when it messaged the Coast Guard that it had a sick man aboard.

TEAM UP with the million and more who make the "American" Party one of the biggest of its kind in the country. Its members may not have the same slant on politics--but they all pledge loyalty to "American."

For the "American" Party is made up of motorists who vote for the American Oil Company's Amoco-Gas and Orange American Gas at The Sign of Greater Values from Maine to Florida.

Amoco-Gas began its career as the original candidate in the special motor fuel field. That was 21 years ago and each succeeding year has won and held the votes of new users. Amoco's history has been all performance--not just promise.

If you want to "look at the record" ask the American Automobile Association, and learn that Amoco-Gas holds more official A.A.A. world's records than any other gas or motor fuel. Amoco-Gas will take you further--smoother--and for less. It costs a bit more per gallon at the pump--is worth much more--does more.

Or if you're a "regular" party voter, there's Orange American Gas, the "regular" party leader for years, and the best at regular price. Made from a pure petroleum base, it has no added chemicals--leaves no harmful deposits. These features and American's new refinery methods give Orange American Gas a new action that is getting action everywhere.

Join the great "American" Party yourself! Vote at The Sign of Greater Values--from Maine to Florida and inland!

The U. Of M.'s Project.

Although still largely in the discussion stage, the ambitious plan to establish an institute of transport at the University of Maryland stirs the imagination. At the commencement exercises Saturday, Charles Henry Davis, New York engineer, sketched a picture of a new $100,000,000 plant at College Park and gave substance to the dream by announcing his own gift of an administration building and library in which will be housed a transport museum and a rare collection of books, also from the same donor.

It is hoped that other gifts will eventually permit erection of 22 buildings on the campus to be devoted to research and study in "anything that is transportable." Since technical equipment is a particular need at College Park, this program gives the university a good opportunity to enhance its prestige in the field of education.

The research in which the proposed institute will specialize will extend not only to land, sea and air travel, but also to telephone and telegraphic communication and even television as well. President Byrd is to be roundly congratulated for the conception of the idea, and, even more so, for his success in securing at least a start toward the tremendous fund needed to bring it to full flower. His task now will be to see the program through to completion.

All this will demand the utmost in energy and persistence. With less than 1 per cent of the necessary money at hand, it will be a long time before the university is safely beyond the fate of too many American institutions which have started out with grandiose plans for special schools only to see them die reproachfully on the draughting-board.

End Of An Eclipse.

Prime Minister Baldwin's appointment of Sir Samuel Hoare as First Lord of the Admiralty brings into sharp focus Great Britain's uneasy and uncertain foreign policy in the face of the disturbed international situation.

Several months ago Sir Samuel's rising star was suddenly eclipsed by his approval of a plan, for the settlement of the Italo-Ethiopian problem, which seemed to reward rather than punish the aggressor. In the tidal wave of opposition that developed in Great Britain, both Sir Samuel and the Hoare-Laval plan were swept into limbo. But, defiant and unapologetic to the last, he emerged from this episode a far from unheroic figure.

Italy's subsequent victory in Ethiopia has rightly or wrongly persuaded many that Sir Samuel was punished only because he shrewdly and realistically discounted the probable course of events. From this point of view his re-emergence as a cabinet member will be regarded as a simple act of justice as well as a development to be commended because it places at the head of the admiralty a man whose administrative competence is unquestioned.

The immediate result of Hoare's appointment, however, may be to weaken Britain's support of League sanctions. For it was his belief that Great Britain was not and would not be in any position to enforce its will against Italy without prior military preparation. No doubt he still entertains this view. His return to the cabinet, therefore, will do nothing to weaken that group which favors the acceptance of Italy's victory in Ethiopia as an accomplished fact.

Registration of Lobbyists.

Passage of a bill providing for the registration of lobbyists appears to be assured at this session of Congress. The measure requires all persons paid to approach Congressmen with the intention of influencing legislation to file statements giving the names of their employers, their compensation and the purpose of their activities. Organizations collecting and spending money to influence legislation would have to make reports similar to those filed by political party committees under the corrupt practices act. Federal departments and agencies would be permitted to promulgate their own rules and regulations for the registration of lobbyists appearing before them.

Obviously the gravest abuses—undercover lobbying, resort to bribery and various kinds of illegitimate pressure that elude detection and definition—cannot be reached by a regulatory law. Nevertheless, compulsory registration should have a salutary effect upon individuals and lobbyists called upon to make a public accounting of their receipts and expenditures. They will be more disposed to caution and less inclined to misuse funds placed at their disposal.

After the furor aroused by the alleged lobbying abuses of public utility representatives brought Congressional investigations and demands for legislative action, the measure which has issued from the conference room seems a comparatively mild proposal. It is doubtful whether it would have much effect upon the general methods of lobbyists. Reasonable publicity, however, is always to be desired and is good as far as it goes. A more ambitious effort at control might have resulted in disappointment by promising more than could be achieved.

Between Two Tax Bills.

Although the tax bill which has just passed the Senate would place a heavy additional burden upon corporate industry, it is a much more acceptable measure than that which passed the House. In place of the steeply graduated levies imposed upon undistributed profits by the latter measure—ranging from nothing to 42½ per cent—the Senate bill substitutes a flat rate of 7 per cent. The Senate moreover, unlike the House, has retained the existing taxes upon corporations, increasing the levies upon net corporate income by 3 per cent.

As Senator King pointed out in presenting the measure, the House bill abandons a tried plan which has yielded annual revenues in excess of $1,000,000,000 in periods of depression for a "plan not tested and uncertain as to its results." The Senate bill by retaining the existing corporation tax, on the other hand, assures the Treasury a certain amount of revenue. Both bills subject dividends to normal income taxes, while the Senate bill increases surtax rates by 1 per cent so far as incomes of $6,000 to $50,000 are concerned.

Thus it is evident that under either plan, corporations and their stockholders will be called upon to provide most of the new revenue requested by the President. The only other important source of income, apart from the proposed increases on surtaxes in the Senate bill, is provided by temporary "windfall" taxes to cover unpaid or refunded processing taxes. The Senate bill also includes certain protective duties on imported fats and oils, which certainly have no proper place in a revenue bill.

If the Senate bill were being judged solely on its merits, there would be little, if anything, to say in its favor. It calls for substantial additions to present normal tax levies and adds thereto a tax on undistributed profits. The latter levy threatens to be a real deterrent to the upbuilding of corporate surpluses, and therefore to recovery. Even so, it is much more acceptable than the House plan, which would permit corporations with large accumulated surpluses to escape taxation entirely by 100 per cent distribution of their earnings.

The conference committee faces a difficult task in trying to reconcile the differences between the House and Senate bills. Indeed it appears to be faced by a clear-cut choice between the two. An alternative is substitution of a proposal like that indorsed by Senators Black and La Follette, which would apply the principle of the graduated taxation of corporate surpluses along the lines of the House bill. The economic and social objections to such taxes have been exhaustively discussed, and need not be repeated. Senator King said in his discussion of the House bill that in 19 years of service in the Senate he had never seen such a united front as was presented by witnesses appearing to testify against the House proposals.

If Congress is firmly resolved, therefore, to pass a tax bill hurriedly at the end of the session, it is to be hoped that the choice will fall upon the lesser of the two evils—the Senate bill. Such negative indorsement is a poor defense of any legislative proposal. But fear of possible alternatives has been responsible for the half-hearted and questioning support by which many previous New Deal measures have been enacted.

A Stage In The Sticks.

A refreshing footnote to this city's drama schedules is already in blueprint. If the present plans of Mr. Stephen E. Cochrane go through, Washingtonians will be privileged to drive through the cool of summer evenings to attend First Nights. The architects have bounded this proposed theater on the north by a dance pavilion, on the west by actors' quarters, on the east by a day nursery for theater-goers' infants, and on the south by fried chicken facilities. Add 800 seats, several available highways, starry nights and the result should be a pleasing combination of relaxation and enjoyment.

Washington in the heat of dog days is particularly susceptible to outdoor entertainment. Music-lovers who were disappointed at the abandonment of the Watergate concerts may find some degree of consolation in this latest development. For there is something about watching actors tread the boards in a bucolic setting that is infinitely more exciting than viewing them in plush and portiered urban theaters. Way down Easterners have capitalized this realization for years. Summer playhouses are thick from Mount Kisco to Skowhegan and everything from Shakespeare to Sherwood has been given in them to the tune of bullfrogs and mosquitoes.

The idea behind this innovation is to give Washingtonians in the summer those plays which, for one reason or another, this city has been previously compelled to forgo. This bodes well for a nicely rounded, unprejudiced schedule for adult audiences. And it will indeed be pleasant when we see, added to the other credit lines on the program—"settings by nature."

He Also Serves.

Senator Vandenberg's statement that he "would find it impossible to accept" the Republican Vice Presidential nomination has created widespread interest chiefly because he is so logical a choice for that "assignment." The Senator has not made an active campaign for first place on the ticket. Only in the unlikely event of a deadlock between Gov. Landon and some other candidate could he expect to receive the Presidential nomination. But his penetrating and constructive criticism, in the Senate, of shoddy New Deal legislation have put him in a strategic position to aid his party very materially in the campaign.

The statement issued by Mr. Vandenberg was most adroit. It tactfully emphasized his disinclination to accept anything but first place on the Republican ticket, and thereby did his Presidential aspirations no harm. Also without bombast and with complete propriety, it invited attention to his effective work on the Senate floor. The result is not so much to eliminate his name from consideration at Cleveland, as to enhance his prestige there.

For this reason it does not appear that Mr. Vandenberg has irrevocably closed the door to acceptance of the Vice Presidential nomination. It is significant, moreover, that his decision was based on the assumption that he could be of "greater service in active labors on the Senate floor than on its silent rostrum." There is at least a suggestion in this statement that the Senator is willing to undertake any responsibility wherein his talents can be really useful. If that is an accurate interpretation, Mr. Vandenberg's name may yet be found on the ticket.

It is a reflection on the political acumen of the American people that the Vice Presidency has been made subject to discount as a desirable office. The Vice President at any time may be suddenly called upon to take over the really staggering responsibilities of Chief Executive. His duties as presiding officer in the Senate are merely incidental to his primary function. Certainly the position should always be considered in the light of its ever-present potentialities.

When a Presidential candidate has been chosen, therefore, a party may reasonably expect that its most distinguished and suitable leader still available will gladly accept the obligation of rounding out the ticket. For such cases personal considerations usually give way to the larger interests of the party and the Nation. It is by no means certain, therefore, that Senator Vandenberg is to be excluded as a running partner of the Presidential nominee in the 1936 campaign.

Sensible Arrangement.

It is an eminently sensible arrangement that the local Community Chest has completed with nearby Maryland and Virginia suburbs to end duplication in charity drives. Next year, a person employed in the District, but living outside its boundaries, will not be embarrassed by receiving two solicitations—one in his office and one at home. He may make his donation here and his money will be put to use either in Washington or his home community, as he directs.

Obviously the new plan will make for better general satisfaction with the Community Chest system and thus heighten its efficiency. But it will also point the needed moral that no community can rest content within its own borders, blind to relationships with its neighbors. Washington has already realized this in respect to park and highway planning, sewerage facilities, water supply and other services. Extension of the conception of a Greater Washington to the Community Chest organization is a thoroughly logical step.

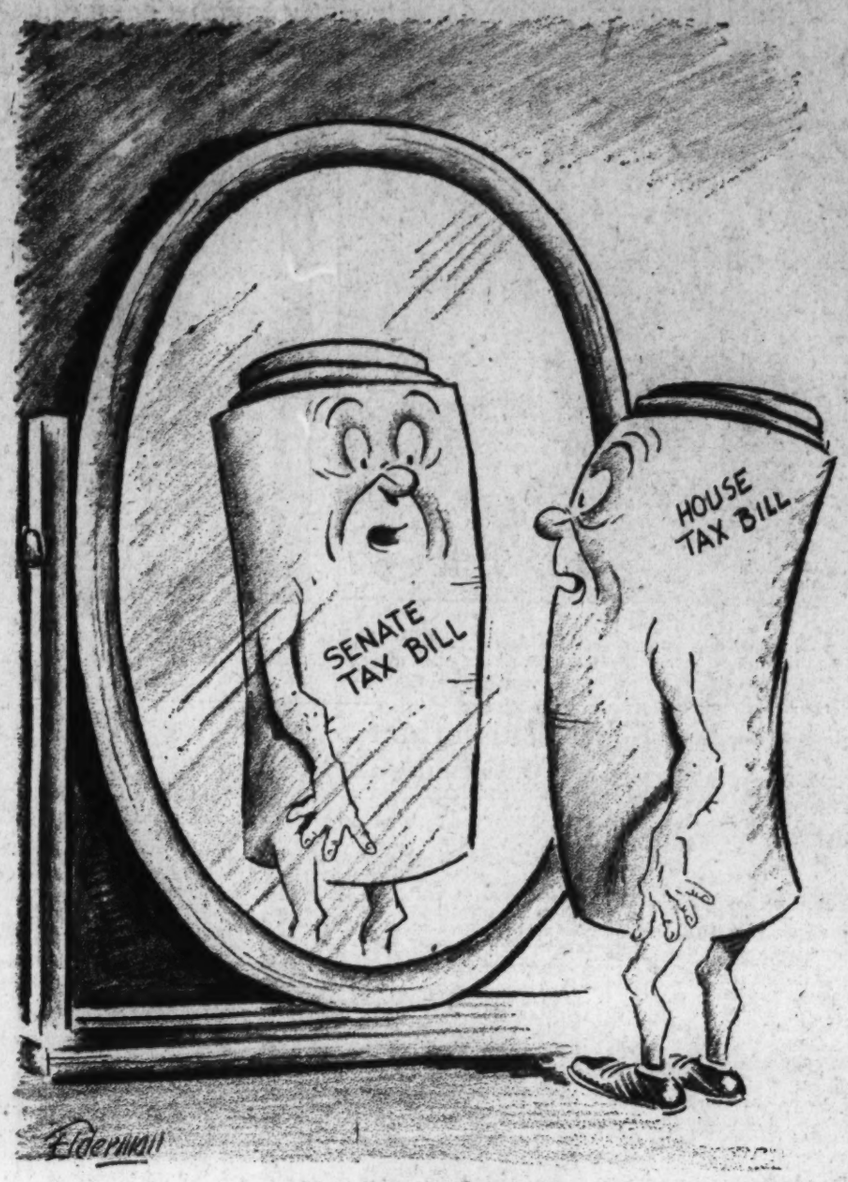
Somebody in the United States meets death by accident every three-quarters of a minute, reports a statistician. And, more's the pity, it's usually the wrong somebody.

The Expert Witness.

From the Hartford Courant.

The question of expert testimony has always been embarrassing to the medical profession, not alone because of the obvious opportunity it offers to the unethical minority to do favors for friendship or cash, but because of the effect on the public of hearing physicians flatly contradict one another on cases that, to the layman, seem to be easily ascertainable matters of fact. When one physician swears on the witness stand that a person is insane or was drunk at a specified time, and another of equal eminence is just as positive that the person is sane or was sober, the layman is apt to discredit unjustly the profession, not realizing that a positive borderline between sanity and insanity or intoxication and sobriety is all but impossible to define.

Massachusetts has solved the problem presented by expert testimony in criminal cases where the plea is insanity by turning the decision over to a commission of alienists appointed by the State. The system has been in operation only a short time and so has not been adequately tested, but it appears to offer a way of defeating the unethical alienist whose opinion is influenced by whoever pays his fee and of protecting the profession from the embarrassment that follows disagreement on borderline cases. At the same time, the jury is spared the difficult task of determining which expert witness to believe.



How I Have Changed!

Letters To The Editor.

In Mr. Hoover's Behalf.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was somewhat surprised at the nature of Mr. Pegler's remarks in The Post of June 2 about the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice. Being a warm admirer of Mr. Hoover's work and achievements, I was tempted to reply to Mr. Pegler's barbed thrusts in the spirit in which they were given. Today Mr. Herbert Corey has replied fully, if somewhat gently, to his friend's observations. However, I should like to add a remark or two in respect to the subject of Mr. Hoover's official conduct.

Mr. Hoover and his men have demonstrated beyond a doubt that the Department of Justice is the only law enforcement agency in this country which operates without fear or favor. And that department is engaged in capturing and putting away those criminals, among others, who are at large chiefly because of the failure of those local agencies of law which should have acted long ago.

There is nothing theatrical about the exhibits at the Bureau of Investigation, when one considers that no other agency of justice is demonstrably proving that "crime does not pay." There is nothing theatrical in the secrecy of Mr. Hoover's methods, when one considers that in most cases in which local officers of the law "co-operate" with the Federal agents the criminals escape through some "slip." And certainly there is nothing theatrical in Mr. Hoover's personal supervision of some of his department's jobs, if you remember that he was roundly criticized by certain members of Congress for not taking a personal part in the arrests made by his agents, and that his are the brains which engineer the capture of criminals wanted by the Federal Government. The apprehension of certain criminals was spectacular, naturally, but not fictitious or "staged" as the department's records will show.

Mr. Hoover has far more obstacles to overcome than those immediately connected with capturing criminals: He has to contend with lax officials, with interfering busybodies who would and do give dangerous outlaws "another chance;" notwithstanding his splendid work, he is subjected to fiery criticism by those who have been making work for him. And it ill becomes those of us who rest easier knowing that Mr. Hoover and his courageous staff have removed, and continue to remove from the world at large the criminals who would make all of us their prey if they could, to try to discredit him by petty criticism. He has too much to contend with, and far too little encouragement.

Military Road.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Only a short time ago the Military road in Arlington County was front page news. Now it is among the forgotten items of news. Yet it is still on the map, a picture of woe and a disgrace to the War Department which ministers its needs.

This road should be repaired promptly. It is a necessary highway leading from the Highway Bridge to a section of Arlington Counnty that has taken on a building boom of no mean proportions. It must carry the heavy traffic not permitted to cross the Memorial Bridge into Arlington County such as delivery trucks, passenger busses and similar heavy vehicles. This road leads to Arlington Cemetery and the grave of the Unknown Soldier. It leads to Fort Myer and the adjutant of this post is its keeper. It is his job to keep it in repairs. What would happen to an officer or enlisted man at the post if his equipment was not kept in first-class condition, ever ready when the inspector made his tour of inspection?

"Tobacco Road" At Home.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I should like to answer E. B. S's letter about "Tobacco Road." It brought back to me my trip through Georgia where I saw the poor tenant farmers and the way they live. I like the truth about things, whether it be in books or a play. Schools and libraries would help raise those poor farmers out of their miserable existence.

Plays are no longer about Peter Rabbit. Playwrights and authors are getting social-minded just as Shakespeare used to be when he made satire out of the courts. And there are also dirty lines in Shakespeare, only written in more pleasing English.

I'd like to take E. B. S. through the slums of Washington. It isn't necessary to go South for Tobacco Roads abound in this fair city of culture.

Amendment To Constitution Urged.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the most recent Supreme Court decisions and the comments thereon from the President, from Mr. William Allen White and newspaper columnists in general, it is rather surprising to me that we can go on as we do and not read the riddle of the Supreme Court. For what the Supreme Court is trying to tell us, it seems to me, is this:

"It is no use. We are a body of expert lawyers, and the majority of us hold the view that we shall be on no firm basis if we allow personal sympathies to sway our judgment in interpreting this document called the Constitution. It must be interpreted legally, logically, not liberally. It was not framed by men who, today, would be accounted liberals, but by men who were intent upon preserving a status quo and did their level best to do it.

"Economic developments seems to have gone far beyond it, but the wrong way to cope with that difficulty is to try to circumvent it by subterfuge and "liberal interpretation." The document itself dictates the correct way to do it, and we must insist that you follow its directions. We are bound by oath to quash every attempt to circumvent it. It is no use trying any more; so take the bull by the horns and amend the Constitution to suit the purposes you wish to accomplish and have done with it."

That is as I read the riddle of the Supreme Court and I should not be surprised if William Allen White is beating Roosevelt to the punch.

S. J. WARBURG.
Washington, June 4.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The statement of Mr. Donald R. Richberg is quite illuminating. Mr. Richberg states that "individual freedom must be preserved." How is the "individual freedom" of the worker to be preserved if legislative assemblies are to fix a minimum scale of wages which he is not at liberty to disregard?

Again, Mr. Richberg says that the preservation of individual freedom "must not be made the basis of denying the rights of the States and the Nation, each within its own jurisdiction, to enact laws to promote and protect the general welfare."

The two statements are irreconcilable. The general welfare only can be protected by the surrender, to a reasonable degree, of individual freedom.

The Constitution, as construed by a majority of the Supreme Court, does not contemplate such surrender. Remedy: Amend the Constitution.

G. M. C.'s Prosperity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Farley's stereotyped speech of Thursday was a striking revelation of what we may expect should the misfortune of four more years of Roosevelt be inflicted upon the country. As a master of the art of distorting facts to suit political situations, the genial spoilsmaster general and winner-picker has had few equals in what might by courtesy be termed ethical politics.

While saddling the bad wolf Liberty League upon the Republican goat with tiresome reiteration, he ignores the state of budget unbalance and its causes by a strenuous laughing-off of the 36 billions debt, which four more years of the Deal will boost to fantastic heights.

Natural forces of recovery, hung in cold storage by some blanket agreement among Deal speakers, are wholly ignored by Mr. Farley. Not so the comeback of the General Motors Corporation, heretofore a "brigand of big business' but now calmly dragged forth as a stock exhibit of New Deal "accomplishment," despite the taint of the Dupont Liberty League in its stock ownership!

That the Government has launched itself and professors in competitive business on a wholesale scale, the public is painfully aware, but this is the first official intimation that the G. M. earnings result was attributable to New Deal genius.

F. C. CODY.

Better 'Coal Oil Johnnies?'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You've got to hand it to Jim Farley. He not only absolves the clique he's hooked up with from guilt for the 15 billions borrowed to "curb unemployment, relieve distress, solve the depression and reform the money changers"—but, oh, cruel monster, he says the poor, spavined and tottering Republican ostrich started the rough stuff in the first place.

Along such highways Mr. Farley should tread light-tongued. He knows—for certainly his speech architects have told him if he's not aware—his utterances have had a tendency to flare back and get him into the heated element up to the collar button; and the harder he tries to extricate his genial personality the tighter he gets jammed—in the mudhole.

If the Republicans were better Coal-Oil Johnnies and plain squanderers than the New Dealers—shucks, why not go back to the Republicans, since politics is just a choice between bad and worse. Maybe they'll "raise" the Dealers. They've seen what it got the New Deal—as witness Farley's election confidence.

In geting off that crack line, "the greatest good to the greatest number," is it possible the Democratic chief may have filled the lads' heads with queer ideas, in course of the current set of "in the bag" speeches.

Joyful Noises.

A new sound has made its debut among the city's noises. It falls on the ear with startling effect. So a man might feel who has lived five years on a deserted island and one day there is a knock on the door of his hut. The response to the new noise here in town is joyful, as it would be on the deserted island. Mayor LaGuardia wouldn't dream of listing it among the suppressable noises.

It is the sound of the riveting machine. We need only catch the once familiar rat-tat-tat of the pneumatic hammer to realize how deep and long has been the intervening silence. They are building again in New York City. Citizens once more walk under timbered arcades and snatch a glimpse of what was once upon a time the city's leading outdoor amusement—excavations. Let the poet have his daffodils in the field and his rainbow in the sky; local hearts leap up when they behold steel girders in the sky.

Unequivocal Pershing

Following are excerpts from an article by H. A. DeWeerd in the March-April issue of the Infantry Journal.

WHEN disasters befell the British and the French in the spring of 1918 the pressure on Pershing greatly increased; even Gen. Bliss was carried away. On May 8, 1918, the combined force of Allied prime ministers and generals assembled to make the final assault on the American commander.

One can readily envisage the scene: Clemenceau with his walrus mustache and gray gloves, Lloyd George with his theatrical mane of hair, Lord Milner in a faultless cutaway, Foch with his nervous, jerky speech, Signor Orlando with the diffident manner of a trained undertaker.

When the battalion of argumentative shock troops worked up to a crescendo, Foch triumphantly rasped out: "Are you willing to risk our being driven behind the Loire?" Crisply, suddenly and like a good poker player Pershing said, "Yes." This took the wind out of the marshal's sails for a moment, but the pack led by Lloyd George set on him again with driving argument.

Finally, when he had had enough of it, Pershing arose, thumped the table and said with the greatest possible emphasis: "Gentlemen, I have thought this program over very deliberately and I will not be coerced."

That ended the meeting. Gen. March later observed that he never had to thump the table to get his way, but it must be said he never had to deal with so many vocal artists at one time.

The thing that hurt the European leaders most about Pershing's invincible "obstinacy" in the matter of amalgamation was his frequent reference to the low state of Allied morale as a reason against the proposal. The Allied generals were quick to point out that Pershing mistook cynicism, born of experience, among the Allied troops for failing morale.

They asserted that the eager American troops only had to tear their guts out on the German wire and machine guns to know this feeling. Pershing could not understand the "Sandhurst stoop" of British officers and viewed with a critical eye the none-too-soldierly rank and file which survived "victorious" attrition of the general staff.

The honeymoon period of the war was now over and the Allies savagely ridiculed each other.

The average American soldier would never have endured amalgamation. There is a telegram in the achives of the A. E. F. in which the commander of one of the best American divisions in the Argonne said if he were asked to fight again in liaison with French divisions, he would resign.

A British major general once made the mistake of asking a wounded American who had served in the British area with the American Twenty-seventh Division how he got on with the British. No Hollywood actor could have registered contempt more satisfactorily as he replied:

"The British; Why them suckers drink tea"

It was really too bad for the legend of Allied military superiority that Nivelle should smash up the French army so soon after we entered the struggle, and that Haig could not be restrained from making his stupid and murderous offensive in the mud of Passchendaele. The British disasters of March and April of 1918 cut down their air of military superiority considerably, and after Caporetto nothing was heard from the Italians but plaintive appeals for help. The French had to wait until May, 1918, for their supreme military humiliation on the Chemin des Dames; but when it came it was a real "facer."

To make matters worse, American intelligence officers had given the French clear warning of the impending stroke, but they ignored it. The same was true of the British warnings to the French at the time. The French retreat became a virtual marathon in which they left bridges and roads intact for the enemy.

A day or two after this amazing collapse, M. Andre Tardieu took it upon himself to badger Gen. Pershing about certain deficiencies in the American staff which had been called to his attention.

At this untimely bit of impudence, Pershing cast aside restraint and told the startled Frenchman in good frontier fashion that the American Army was fed up on silly French criticism and that, to judge from recent events, they had plenty of work to do at home.

When he wanted to, Pershing could turn off a sentence that had the kick of an Army mule. In the main he got along best with Gen. Petain, who was also as blunt as a dull ax.

The impartial muse of history (when she finally gets around to it) may well show that Pershing had a better grasp on reality in 1917-18 than most Allied generals.

Long before they were willing to do so, he had written Russia off the books as a dead loss. He did not foresee Caporetto, but it confirmed his worst fears. He alone seemed consistently willing to risk the possibility of a German breakthrough in 1918.

To all complaints as to the lateness of the American effort, he could and did reply that it was largely due to the failure of the Allies to provide the artillery and tanks they had promised and to their insistence on shipping nothing but American machine gunners and infantry during the critical months of 1918.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

"D.J." Publicity.

I can't quite put my finger on the reasons, but it strikes me that the Department of Justice is too fond of drama these days. This will be akin to treason, in the opinion of our true-believing, hero-worshiping citizens, and that in itself is bad because no department of the Government should be held above questioning or criticism. We get crushes in this country, and when we are packing the torch for some public figure, department or idea we resent the slightest suggestion that the object of our affection may have a wooden leg or a nagging disposition.

But invariably, after a while, we find ourselves sitting in some twilight corner being silly over some other swift blonde, convinced that this one is the dream girl.

We have been nuts about France, Woodrow Wilson and his 14 points, Herbert Hoover, Insull utilities and Cuba at various times, and many of us remember when it would have been dangerous business to say, "Yes but"——

• • • •

It is true that I recently asked permission to visit Alcatraz Prison, off San Francisco, and was thrown for a loss, but I am sure that is not my reason for insisting that some one should be allowed to visit Alcatraz every now and again to check up on Sanford Bates, the head man of the Federal prison department. I wasn't much disappointed.

It is a long, hard trip, and I get bored looking out the windows of trains and scared looking out the windows of planes. I take Mr. Bates to be an honest man with honest motives, although he is a cop, and cops develop a curious mental slant all their own. But Alcatraz isn't his prison, and the best plan in dealing with all government officials is to make them stand inspection and keep them honest.

Alcatraz has been described as the American Devil's Island, which is a poor boast, because the original Devil's Island is a disgrace to the French nation and is gradually being abandoned in favor of a worse but more secluded and comparatively obscure island in the Orient. Alcatraz is a secret prison in which anything might happen, including rough stuff, and though it may be run strictly on the level at present, that is no assurance that the next man in charge won't turn it into a Joliet, a Welfare Island or the kind of madhouse that the Atlanta was a few years ago under the management of this same Department of Justice. In that case the precedent of secrecy would run for him, too, and that would be just dandy.

• • • •

A secret prison suggests the Island of Lipari, in which Mussolini filed away a lot of good, respectable Italians for the offense of speaking out of turn, and the oubliette camps where Adolf Hitler hides those tough, courageous Germans who had the reckless gumption to rise up and declare he wasn't any superman, but just a crazy Austrian house painter.

And with the lesson of Huey Long so fresh in our memory, I don't think we ought to indorse the idea of secrecy in an American prison, which some tough guy might be tempted to use for a political dog house a few years hence. Government is getting bossier and more impudent toward the people day by day in the United States, and the attitude of a government official in declaring that nobody has a right to know what goes on in a big government institution is symptomatic of what I mean.

Bates may be all right and his prison may be a model, but that isn't enough. Everybody in private life has to stand inspection and tell the Government where he was at 9 o'clock on the night of the eighth and what he did with the $10 he won on the fifth race, and Bates ought to be compelled to lay it on the line himself just for the sake of the precedent, if for no other reason.

• • • •

Some intuition, perhaps, tells me that the emotional or sentimental regard for J. Edgar Hoover, the chief the G-Men, is going to result in a reaction one of these days. Hoover, in his love of personal publicity and his self-approval, closely reminds me of old Ellis Parker, the celebrated hick detective of Mount Holly, N. J., who has just been arrested on a charge of kidnaping and second-degree assault in the political mixup which followed the Lindbergh-Hauptmann case.

Parker's favorite reading for years has been his scrapbooks, and he had a pose of rustic shrewdness or quaintnes which made good copy for the papers. I don't pretend to know the facts of the jam in which he finds himself today, but I do know that for years whenever some wronged wife slew her mate in sleep or some crazed farmhand killed his mother and maimed his babe with a hoe anywhere in the State of New Jeresy old Parker would trample down everyone in his path to get his face in the picture.

Melvin Purvis, the man who got Dillinger, left the Department of Justice soon after this triumph, and the reasons have never been told. But inasmuch as the department courts publicity, Mr. Hoover ought to give us a "tell," with particular reference to the suspicion that Purvis fell because he outscored the boss in the publicity.

Philippine Laborites To Demand 'New Deal'

Manila, June 7 (AP).—Labor leaders seeking higher wages for the working classes announced tonight they would demand a "new deal" for labor from the National Assembly.

They disclosed plans for a huge mass meeting of workers in Manila during the National Assembly session, which is to open June 16, and said the workers would march on the Commonwealth legislative body to demand "not social justice but common justice."

"We will back our demands with a general strike if necessary to show that we mean business," said Felicisimo Lauzon, head of the movement.

Observer Notes Confusion Of England Mirroring Unrest Throughout Europe And Suggests Next Clash Will Ignore Borders.

By David Wills.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

THE ONE THING that is certain in Europe and in Britain at the present time is that nothing is certain, that old alliances and alignments are breaking up, parties splitting, loyalties fading. And in Britain at least it is still practically impossible to see what new situation will appear.

The National Government was never national, and is becoming so shaky as to be no longer a government. Some months ago it put down a firm foot, decided to compel re-organization of the mining industry; it has just introduced its bill, but has added amendments so that it will no longer be compulsory. Similar tactics have been pursued with the Tithe bill, which was supposed to get rid of land taxes imposed in certain areas for benefit of the church; the situation is to be cleared up very promptly, in 60 years time.

With these added to other domestic bungles, and to its record in foreign affairs, the Government finds itself losing its grip over the House of Commons. But although the discontent is everywhere evident, there is no clear sign of a successor.

Right Conservatives In England Badly Split.

THE RIGHT-WING Conservatives are working hard to get rid of Baldwin and his National Liberal and Labor satellites; but apart from their unanimity is wishing Baldwin away there is little in common between the various right Conservative politicians. And although the electorate has chosen Baldwin's National government in preference to a Labor or Liberal, it is highly improbable that a right-wing Conservative government would be tolerated for long.

Even a solid Conservative government would be difficult to keep together, since the Conservative Party is split on the inescapable issue of support for the League of Nations. And just as the government and the Conservative Party are split, so are the Labor Party, the Liberal Party, the church and Lloyd George's council of action.

The only effective opposition to the Conservatives could come from a Popular Front of Labor and Liberals, united on a specific program for, say, five years ahead without prejudice to the long-term beliefs of either party. But the Labor executive, as conservative in tradition as the American Federation of Labor, refuses point-blank to cooperate. Many of the local Labor leaders are eager to work with the Liberals, who are small in representatives at Westminster but large in votes, and in the Chertsey division, for example, they are playing the farce of co-operating with the Liberals as individuals, and then, for pacification of the Labor heads at Transport House headquarters, passing a vote of censure on themselves for breaking Labor party standing orders.

Even if this difficulty could be eliminated, there would still remain the pacifist issue, on which George Lansbury resigned his leadership of the Labor party. Controversy is rapidly becoming heated between those churchmen who are willing to fight if necessary for the League of Nations, and those who will not compromise their complete pacificism on any account. And because the Council of Action derives a great deal of its potential strength from the nonconformist churches, it is inevitably split on the same issue.

Thus the prospects for a Popular Front in England are remote. All that left wing opinion seems to be able to accomplish is to frighten the government away from too rapid a burial of the League of Nations. The government was prevented from calling off sanctions at the last League Council meeting and selling out precipitately to Mussolini. But it is quite a different problem for the opposition to force the government to action, or to unite in forming a substitute government.

At first sight it may seem like irony that at this point the French should have changed their government, and voted for left-wing parties more enthusiastic for the collective system of the League. But it's more than likely that nothing will change very much in France.

Successive general elections in France have given a majority to a union of parties of the left; and successive governments have turned out to be unions of the center and right as well as the left. For this the French have the Socialists to thank, since they have declined in the past to take part in any government without an absolute majority for their own party.

League Cannot Count On Earlier Bulwarks.

Dissatisfied with past results the French voter has turned away from the center parties toward the extreme right, and still more to the extreme left, the Communists. M. Blum's Socialists have at last committed themselves to forming a government, but their place has been taken by the Communists, who in their turn will no longer co-operate. So once again the left-wing party has had to turn to the center, and had to water down its program.

AT THE LAST League Council meeting support for League action came indirectly from public opinion in England and directly from some of the smaller countries. But, although the latter were able to prevent an immediate collapse at Geneva, they will not be able to carry the League on their own shoulders. And with Britain and France both shirking their commitments the small countries are naturally trying to spot the winner in the next European show-down.

Britain's only immediate response to the confusions let loose by the breakdown of Geneva has been to canvass a Mediterranean pact to protect British interests from Italian threats. She has also continued the Locarno Powers' conversations with Germany by presenting Hitler with some very pertinent questions, suitably wrapped up in diplomatic politeness, which will require skillful answers or evasions. But Hitler is probably right in thinking that the Rhineland reoccupation is no longer a live question.

Failure by the democratic countries of Europe to secure a solution of European difficulties through a democratic League of Nations will present the progressives of Europe with the dilemma familiar to the Liberal party in England. With democratic solutions denied, the choice lies between the extremes of nationalist Fascism and internationalist Socialism of a militant Communist variety.

War seems to be more and more unavoidable, and the question assuming dominant importance is just what are we going to do about it. Become completely pacifist, or fight? And if we fight, what will it be for; the status quo, Fascism, or Communism? It seems increasingly certain that, unlike the last war, the next European conflagration will be converted into a social war cutting across all problems of national superiority for individual nations.

"Idiot's Delight"

By William Lyon Phelps.

Pulitzer Prize.

Perhaps there has never been a season during all the years that the Pulitzer Prize has been awarded in drama when the announcement was received with more general acclaim and enthusiasm than in this year, when President Butler announced that the play selected as the best for the whole season of 1935-1936 was "Idiot's Delight," by Robert E. Sherwood.

• • • •

Previous to the selection, the advisory board of the Columbia School of Journalism removed for this year and for succeeding years the restriction limiting the award only to a play by an author who had never received the prize. Thus, the committee were free to recommend any American play; and despite the fact that this season was so remarkable in excellence that four or five plays were worthy of the prize, the committee had no hesitation in selecting "Idiot's Delight."

It is a brilliant and original comedy, full of interesting and lifelike characters, full of effective situations, full of laughter and tragedy and irony and thought. It is magnificently produced by the Theater Guild, with two stars, Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt. It has packed the house at every performance.

Robert E. Sherwood was graduated at Harvard in 1917. He served in the war, has been editor of magazines, journalist and author of various articles and books, and has had an amazingly successful career as a playwright, considering that he is only 40 years old.

• • • •

But although his previous successes have shown great ability, so that he had earned a place among America's foremost dramatists, this prize-winning play is such an advance on all his earlier work as to arouse the highest hopes for his future, as well as pride that he is an American.

The play is published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

By the way, F. P. A. has reminded us all that the name Pulitzer is not pronounced Pew-litzer, but Pull-itzer, with the accent strongly on the first syllable.

Placing the Fan.

Janitor—Where do you want this put?

Mr. Boffle—What is it? Oh, the electric fan! Now let's see . . .

Janitor—I can put it on top of this cabinet here.

Mr. Boffle—No, not there. It blows all the papers off my desk.

Mr. Toops (who shares the office)—And not a bad idea, either! Those papers have been piling up there for a year.

Mr. Boffle—Never mind about those papers; you just take care of your own desk.

Janitor (still wondering where to put the fan)—I could put it over here.

Mr. Toops—That'll be on Miss Baumgarten's neck.

Mr. Boffle—Is Miss Baumgarten's neck any better than anybody else's?

• • • •

The Janitor (getting pretty disgusted)—Lissen, I'd like to get this thing put up. I could put it over here by the window.

Miss Creench (an office worker who has just come in on the debate)—Not there, please. Mr. Melkin's hair.

Mr. Boffle—What about Melkin's hair? I didn't know he had any.

Miss Creench—He has a few and when they're blown around he goes nuts.

Janitor—I could face it like this and adjust it so it won't get in nobody's hair.

Mr. Toops—Nuthin' doin'! It'll blow on my left side all the time.

Mr. Boffle—What of it?

Mr. Toops—I don't want no sinus trouble.

Mr. Boffle—Gettin' delicate in your old age, eh? Imagine being afraid of getting a cold from an electric fan!

Mr. Toops (to the janitor)—Okay. Stick it over so it'll blow on him; he's tough!

Janitor—You gotta make up your minds. This thing is heavy. How about sticking it up here and pointing it this way?

Boffle—Okay with me.

Toops—That'll be all right, I guess.

Miss Creench—Go ahead.

• • • •

(The janitor carves out a shelf, puts it up after much labor and numerous trips to the cellar, gets the fan in place eventually and starts it just as the Big Boss arrives and sits at his desk across the room.)

The Boss (bellowing)—Hey! my letters! My memos! What the hell are you doing?

Janitor—Why, I was . . . .

The Boss—It blows right down on my desk. How can I do any work in a hurricane?

Boffle and Toops—We told him not to put it there.

Janitor (Bitterly)—Okay. I know where to put this thing.

The Boss—Well, put it there, then!

Janitor (tossing it through the open window)—Okay, toots!

The special prosecutor first tackled the loan shark or "Shylock" racket. Then the investigating eye fell on Luciano, said to be the city's most flourishing racketeer.

12 Saved as Yawl Hits Hidden Rock

Twelve persons were rescued late yesterday when a 47-foot sailing vessel, owned by Henry L. Norrin, business manager of Columbia University, hit a submerged rock off Eaton's Neck, Long Island, Coast Guard headquarters revealed here.

A message relayed from the commandant at Bay Shore said the vessel, a rigged yawl, identified as K-16513, hit the rock about a mile from the Eaton's Neck Coast Guard station.

After rescuing the persons aboard, Coast Guardsmen beached the craft at the entrance to Huntington Bay, where attempts will be made to repair and refloat it at high tide.

Tax Conferees Slated to Study Bill Tomorrow

House to Name Members Today to Seek Accord With Senators.

By the Associated Press.

Congressional leaders studied the divergent Senate and House tax bills last night, dogged by the growing belief that a conference compromise would be unobtainable before Congress reopens floor consideration of the revenue measure a week hence.

Today the House will name its conferees to sit with the eight Senate members already appointed to seek accord in the final obstacle to adjournment. The two groups, however, were not expected to get together before tomorrow.

Taking advantage of the lull in floor fighting over the tax bill, proponents of housing and ship subsidy legislation will make tomorrow what may be their last bid for action this session.

They Insist on Action.

With the Senate in a one-day session before the week's recess called for the Republican National Convention at Cleveland, New York's two Democratic Senators—Wagner and Copeland—will vie for the floor today to bring up their respective housing and ship subsidy bills. They are insisting upon action on these measures regardless of the tax bill's fate.

Attempts to get both bills up Saturday were blocked when a quorum call failed to bring a majority of the Senate to the chamber and there was an abrupt adjournment over the week-end. The aim of Administration leaders has been to have conference agreements on the tax and relief bills when Congress reconvenes June 15, act on them quickly and adjourn Congress sine die.

If the tax bill agreement should not have been reached by then, however, it was generally conceded there was some chance for additional legislation beyond that contemplated by leaders.

Prospects Uncertain.

Prospects for a tax agreement were uncertain despite the appointment of additional Senate conferees more friendly than their colleagues to the House bill and the theory of high taxes on undistributed corporation profits.

The tax measures passed by the House and Senate were so widely different as to present the possibility of drafting of an entirely new bill in the conference room.

Any effort to draft a new tax bill within less than a week should be confronted with tremendous obstacles, unless the conferees used some substitute already drafted, such as the compromise offered in the Senate by Senators Black (Democrat), Alabama, and La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin.

The Black-La Follette plan would retain the existing flat corporate taxes of 12½ to 15 per cent, but superimpose a high tax on undistributed profits, much closer to the scale imposed by the House than the comparatively low, flat surtax of 7 per cent voted by the Senate.

British Aid Asked By French Premier

Paris, June 7 (AP).—Negotiations with Great Britain to fix a common attitude toward European problems were decided upon today by France's new premier, Socialist Leon Blum.

After conferring with Charles Corbin, Ambassador to London, Blum instructed him to seek an immediate consultation with Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, of Great Britain. It is possible Blum and Eden will confer here later.

The premier said he was anxious to find a joint policy before the question of sanctions against Italy comes up at the meeting of the League Assembly on June 30. Unsettled conditions in central Europe also are worrying the government.

Freighter Wrecked In Fog; Crew Safe

Halifax, Nova Scotia, June 7 (AP).—The Norwegian freighter Magnhild was reported tonight to have been wrecked at Mistaken Point, Newfoundland, after a day of misadventures to shipping along the fog-bound coasts of that island and the Province of Nova Scotia.

The American fishing schooner Grand Marshal, a 128-ton vessel, out of Gloucester, Mass., grounded on Boots Reef, Nova Scotia, but was refloated and taken to Canso, Nova Scotia. It was believed she was not badly damaged.

A Norwegian ship, the Evviva, was refloated after grounding at Fox Point, Nova Scotia. The 1,597-ton vessel was taken to Parrsboro, Nova Scotia, for inspection.

Dock Strike Paralyzes Shipping at Antwerp

Antwerp, Belgium, June 7 (AP).—A strike of 10,000 dock workers still paralyzed operations in this port tonight.

Only wheat freighters were being allowed to unload, and most vessels were giving Antwerp a wide berth.

During the week of May 30 to June 6 only 17 vessels docked here, compared with 181 in a corresponding period of 1935.

Strong guards were posted at American-owned factories, where work was progressing unhampered.

Moves were under way to start strikes at Charleroi and Liege, but no disorders occurred in those places.

'Priceless' Diadem Plundered From Incas Displayed in N. Y.

Crown of Our Lady of the Andes, Acquired by American Syndicate, Has 453 Precious Stones, One of 45 Carats; Valued at $4,500,000.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—In a lofty gilded hotel suite, Warren Piper, a Chicago jeweler, displayed today a great glittering diadem which he described as the storied and all-but-priceless crown of Our Lady of the Andes.

A group of visitors stood popeyed before the magnificence of the crown, which Piper, head of the American syndicate which yesterday came into possession of the object, had placed in a dull wooden case, flooded by indirect lights.

The gold of the diadem gleamed dully against the green radiance shooting from the stones, which Piper said were emeralds, encrusting and hanging pendant from the crown, as it lay on three tiers of somber red velvet fashioned in the shape of a wedding cake.

Piper said his syndicate had sought for years to obtain the diadem. Mentioned $4,500,000 as an approximate value.

White-faced with excitement, he said he could give no exact information as to what will be done with the crown.

He adedd, however, it might be placed on exhibition and later broken up for sale to private individuals.

The biggest of the 453 stones, he said, is 45 carats, which, on the basis of a maximum of $5,000 a carat, would make it worth $225,000. This stone is set in the center of the crown's front arch. Seventeen pear-shaped stones hang as pendants from the top; others are encrusted all about.

Here is substantially the story of the diadem as related by Piper: It was completed in 1599 and taken from the Incas by Pizzaro's conquistadores in the conquest of Peru four centuries ago. Negotiations for sale of the diadem, described as the most valuable ever owned by the Catholic Church, were begun in 1914, proceeds to go to charity. The Russian Czar was interested, but the war's outbreak put a stop to negotiations. Nothing more was done until Piper and his associates more than a year ago began active negotiations. Meanwhile, the crown had been under safekeeping in New York.

Piper would not disclose the price paid. He said merely that money went to several South Americans claiming a part ownership, as well as to the church.

Roosevelt Back At White House For Short Stay

Plans to Act on Several Bills; Leaves Tonight for Speaking Tour.

By the Associated Press.

With 1,500 miles of travel since Friday behind him, President Roosevelt returned to Washington yesterday to remain a little more than 30 hours before starting out on a 4,000-mile speaking tour of Arkansas, Texas and Indiana.

The President arrived in the early afternoon from funeral services for the late Speaker Joseph W. Byrns, at Nashville, Tenn.

During his brief stay at the White House he will act on a bundle of bills sent to him by Congress in the last week and give attention to the three set speeches he is scheduled to deliver at Little Rock, Ark., the night of June 10; at Dallas, Tex., the morning of the 12th, and at Vincennes, Ind., the morning of the 14th.

Swinging back to Washington June 15, he will be ready for the wind-up of Congress—if it comes by mid-month.

Dependent on whether the National Legislature gets away in time, he probably will attend the Harvard-Yale boat races at New Haven, Conn., June 19, four days before the opening of the Democratic National Convention at Philadelphia.

The Executive, a little tired from his long trip to Nashville, where he spent more than four hours in a sweltering atmosphere, set an early hour to retire last night so he would be rested for his long Southwestern journey.

Leaving here late tonight, he probably will make a few rear-platform appearances en route to Little Rock, where he will speak at the State centennial celebration.

From the Arkansas capital he goes to Dallas, center of Texas' one-hundredth anniversary of her independence from Mexico. On the way there he will visit the San Jacinto battlefield at Houston, and the historic Alamo at San Antonio. He also will make a stop at the State capital at Austin, where Gov. James Allred will meet him.

He will spend the night of the twelfth at the Fort Worth home of his son, Elliott, leaving the next morning for Indiana, via Denison, Tex. At Vincennes he will dedicate a memorial to George Rogers Clark, who defeated the British there and opened the Northwest to the American colonists.

En route to Washington, the President will pause for a brief visit at Hodgenville, Ky., birthplace of Abraham Lincoln.

dens became alarmed. The tree was in the right of way. They protested, and Congress decided it was worth $10,000 to save the oak by building the road around it.

The tree was unmolested, and a few years ago tree surgeons were assigned to the job of preserving it. They cropped its dead branches and stuffed its decayed parts.

But its days were numbered. Yesterday's puff of wind, which lasted but a few seconds, broke it off at the ground. The trunk was hollow. The roots were rotting.

In a few days wood choppers and souvenir hunters will dispose of the remains.

No one was injured when ten of the sailing boats taking part in the Potomac River Sailing Association race were capsized by the squall. It was the association's second successive race in the channel to be broken up by high winds and rain, the race five weeks ago being terminated by a furious squall.

The boats had just completed the first lap of the two-lap course and were swinging past the starting line near the Naval Air Station when the squall struck. The ships that were overturned and their crews are:

Serena, piloted by R. C. Cruitt and Raleigh Daniel; Tangier, Charles B. Degges, secretary of the Board of Education, and Ernest Covert; Nandue, Charles Dodge and his 15-year-old son, Charles, jr.; Gwen, Dr. A. J. Pagan and Robert Downs; Sygnet, W. W. Deihl; Leader, U. S. Lambert; Skip, R. C. Wagner; Lady Avon, Judge P. E. Edrington and Arthur Clephane; Louise, Warren Mitchell and Barbara Watson, and Roma, Robert Menzel and Newton Fletcher.

The mercury, which in the pre-storm hours yesterday reached a maximum of 87 degrees, dropped more than 16 degrees when the storm broke, bringing relief to the sweltering city.

The Weather Bureau last night promised more rain and continued cool winds for today.

Pan-American League Barred As Parley Topic

Opposition by Chile Kills Proposal for Meeting In December.

By the Associated Press.

Chile's veto of any consideration by the approaching inter-American peace conference at Buenos Aires of proposals for creation of a League of American Nations apparently has barred that topic definitely from the conference agenda.

This view was expressed yesterday by informed sources which explained that under customary procedure in Pan-American parleys the unanimous consent of participating nations was necessary before a suggested subject could be placed on the program.

Urged by Three Countries.

Officials indicate the same system will be followed in the Buenos Aires meeting, called by President Roosevelt to consider means of strengthening the peace machinery of the Western Hemisphere. The meeting is expected to be held not earlier than December.

Three Latin-American countries—Colombia, the Dominican Republic and Guatemala—proposed the establishment of a League of American Nations, patterned generally after the Geneva institution, to promote peace among the 21 American republics.

Chile has objected to this, as well as to other suggestions for the creation of an inter-American court of justice, on the ground that such moves would impair the universality of both the League of Nations and the Hague Court of International Justice.

Even before Chile acted, however, some Latin American observers had predicted that the project for an American league would find little support at the conference. This was notwithstanding what some diplomats here viewed in recent months as a pronounced drift on the part of some South and Central American countries away from the Geneva League.

Guatemala only a few weeks ago followed the earlier lead of Paraguay and Costa Rica in resigning from the Geneva peace agency.

From several others have emanated expressions of concern over what they regarded as a tendency on the part of the Geneva institution to minimize the importance of its Latin American constituents. There also has been noticeable disappointment at the League's failure to prevent the Italo-Ethiopian war.

These surface indications, in the view of some, were calculated to lend impetus to an exodus of Latin American nations from the League and to the creation of a strictly Pan-American agency isolated from European political disputes.

In authoritative quarters, the view is expressed that whatever the conference accomplishes toward preserving peace among the Americas will be based on the strengthening of existing treaties of arbitration and conciliation and the possible adoption of new ones.

Bailey Winner As Kerr Loses In N.C. Primary

Hoey, Dr. McDonald in Close Gubernatorial Nomination Race.

By the Associated Press.

Charlotte, N. C., June 7.—Renomination of Senator J. W. Bailey, defeat of Representative John H. Kerr, of the Second District, and a close battle between two of four candidates for Governor were indicated tonight as the outcome of yesterday's Democratic primary in North Carolina.

Senator Bailey, who was charged by his opponents with failing to support the Roosevelt Administration loyally, held a clear majority over the three candidates seeking to oust him on the face of returns from nearly two-thirds of the State's 1,856 precincts. Bailey made no speeches during the campaign, but issued a statement saying he had voted for virtually all the proposals of the President.

The vote in 1,184 precincts: Bailey, 139,621; R. T. Fountain, of Rocky Mount, a former lieutenant governor, 101,808; David L. Strain, of Durham, 6,862; W. H. Griffin, of Chapel Hill, 13,354.

Kerr, a member of the House since 1923 and a leading proponent of tobacco control legislation, was far behind A. O. Dickens, of Wilson in returns, from 83 of the district's 119 precincts. The vote was: Kerr, 13,891; Dickens, 17,251.

In the hotly contested race for Governor, Clyde R. Hoey, of Shelby, a brother-in-law of former Gov. O. Max Gardner, held a thin margin over Dr. Ralph W. McDonald, 33-year-old Winston-Salem legislator and ex-college professor who made repeal of the State's 3 per cent sales tax the main plank in his platform. Lieut. Gov. A. H. Graham was third. John A. McRae, Charlotte lawyer, with a comparative handful of votes, brought up the rear.

With 1,337 precincts tabulated, the standing was: Hoey, 126,448; McDonald, 123,307; Graham, 80,366; McRae, 4,862.

On the available returns Kerr was the only one of the seven Congressmen with opposition who was apparently defeated.

Historic Rippon Lodge Scene of D. A. R. Affair

Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis Entertain at Party; Guests Conducted on Tour of Home, Told of Interesting Incidents in Its History.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Rippon Lodge, described by the driver of a sightseeing bus, pointing to the entrance, as "the place where the American Revolution was born," was the scene of two garden parties over the week-end. The first was that on Saturday at which Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis, owners of the historic estate, entertained a group of friends, and the second, that yesterday afternoon for which they opened their home for the benefit of Susan Reviere Hetzel Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mrs. Ellis' sister, Miss Luella P. Chase, is regent of the chapter for which yesterday's party was given. Rain in the middle of the afternoon obliged guests to remain inside and on the veranda, but failed to keep them away. Mr. Ellis, standing in the doorway of one of the rooms, addressed those on the veranda and in the house, telling some of the history of Rippon Lodge, located 8 miles beyond Pohick Church.

At the time of the World War, he said, while questioning a witness at a hearing in connection with the purchase of old river lands, he asked him where he lived. "Dunfries," was the answer. It recalled to Mr. Ellis memories of "Rippon Lodge, the home of the Blackburns near Dunfries," of which his grandfather, Blackburn, had told him as a boy.

When he first visited the place two old bachelors who conducted a dairy business were living there, with the cream separators in the hall and sacks of corn in what once was the paneled drawing room, now used as the dining room of the house. When Mr. Ellis bought it, it came again into the hands of the Blackburns, having been out of the possession of the family only three of the 211 years since it was built. It is the oldest house still standing in Virginia.

Designed Mount Vernon.

Richard Blackburn, by whom it was built, was an architect, Mr. Ellis said, and he designed Mount Vernon for Lawrence Washington and the historic Falls Church. Five Blackburn girls who were married in the house were wed to Washingtons, and George Washington stayed there many times, making what was then a day's journey from Mount Vernon.

Mr. Ellis also told his guests of the organization at Rippon Lodge of the first military company formed in anticipation of the war with England. It was the Prince William County Volunteers, the command of which was offered to Col. William Blackburn. Thomas Blackburn quartered a regiment of soldiers on the place one winter during the Revolution, clothing and feeding them, and there still stands the guard house used at that time. The estate also had a grist mill, an iron foundry and a copper mine.

An old tunnel which Mr. Ellis discovered while men were preparing ground for some planting leads from the house down to the ravine and was originally built as a refuge from the Doeg Indians, who had perpetrated massacres in the vicinity just before Rippon Lodge was built.

Guests yesterday went through the tunnel into the garden, looked at the quaint bedrooms upstairs with their four-poster beds, old dressers, chairs and washstand, and their uneven, wide board floors, and went through all the rooms downstairs, furnished as they might have been when Washington was a visitor there.

Three Generations.

Three generations of Blackburns represented Prince William County in the House of Burgesses, said Mr. Ellis, one of them at the time the colonies protested against the tax on tea. He suggested importing and planting tea bushes from Bermuda and experimented at Rippon Lodge. A quarterly magazine published in 1825 by William and Mary College cited as remarkable the fact these were still growing. Yesterday, Mr. Ellis pointed them out to some of the visitors.

Among the guests yesterday were Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, State regent of the District D. A. R., and Mrs. Harry Colfax Grove, past State regent, both of whom spoke briefly.

On Saturday, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis had about 150 guests, among whom were the Ambassador of Germany, Herr Hans Luther; the Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. MacWhite, Mme. Alfaro, wife of the Minister of Panama; Senator and Mrs. William H. King, Mrs. Charles L. McNary, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Hurley, Mr. and Mrs. John Pratt, owners of Chatham; Mrs. William Byrd Lee, the former Jane Blackburn, a direct descendant of William Balckburn, with her son, the Rev. William Byrd Lee, rector of the Episcopal Church at Gloucester, Va.; Mr. and Mrs. Carter Grimes, whose historic home is Marmion, in King Georges County; Mrs. Smith Bowman, of Sunset Hills; Mr. Leslie Garnett, Judge and Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, Gen. and Mrs. Frank Hines, Mr. Gilbert Hitchcock, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Montjoy.

Next Sunday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Ellis will entertain members of the Phi Betta Kappa Fraternity, of Washington, of which Mr. Ellis was president for a number of years.

Miss Warwick Wed To J. D. Battle, Jr.

Ceremony Solemnized in the Church at Ardmore, Pa.

Of interest in Washington is the marriage on Saturday of Miss Lauretta Hancock Warwick, niece of Mr and Mrs. Granville B. Hopkins, of Haverford, Pa., and daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Dudley Warwick, to Mr. John Dillard Battle, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. John Dillard Battle, of Washington.

The wedding took place in St. Mary's Church, Ardmore, the Rev. Louis Wetherbee Pitt officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Nelson Dudley Warwick, jr. Mrs. Robert D. Goodall, of Detroit, her cousin, was matron of honor and Miss Martha Moorehouse, maid of honor. Mrs. Ames Cushman, of St. Louis, a frequent visitor here, where her cousins, Mrs. Charles Warren and Mr. Robert Woods Bliss, former Ambassador to Argentine, are prominent in Capital life, has written a delightful book of childhood days in Europe, under the title, "She Wrote It All Down."

As Miss Mary Semple Ames, Mrs. Cushman was a belle in St. Louis and made her debut at a memorable ball there. She went on the European trip, of which she has written, when she was 11 year old, and remained for four years attending French schools. Her diary is the quaint chronicle that Charles Scribners' Sons have brought out with a jacket by Reginald Birch, original illustrator of "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

The wide-eyed American girl was a keen observer. When she saw Queen Victoria riding in her carriage, she set down painstakingly on paper this impression of the great queen: "Her Majesty came along in a four-horse carriage. The queen had on a long, black silk dress, and a black bonnet with a white feather. I was disappointed she did not have on her crown, but I just fell in love with her anyway."

Heidelberg to her was one conflict after another. "Here the young men," she recorded, "amuse themselves fencing with sharp swords and slashing each other's faces up. If you have a scar all the way across your cheek, you are considered a hero, and all the German ladies love you."

Miss Leonora Curtin, of New Mexico, who has been a guest of Mrs. George Barnett, widow of the World War commandant of the United States Marine Corps, has left for the West, accompanied by Mrs. Barnett's 10-year-old grandson, Henry Suydam, jr. Young Henry will meet his mother, Mrs. Gordon Suydam, in Wyoming, where they will spend two months on a ranch together.

Mrs. Barnett has opened her country place, Wakefield Manor, in Rappahannock County, Va., for the summer. She will be joined there shortly by her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Basil Gordon, of Baltimore, and their children.

United States Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, one of Washington's most eligible widowers, will celebrate his birthday today as usual by hard work on affairs of State. Senator Wagner was born in 1877.

He is the father of an attractive son, Robert F. Wagner, jr., now in college, who has been popular in the younger set on his vacations in Washington.

Senator Wagner lives at the Shoreham Hotel and is one of those who take advantage of the nearness of Rock Creek Park for early morning strolls.

For Love or Money

By Rob Eden.

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO.

BRENDA OPENED her eyes and looked around the room. First, she saw the scarred oak desk, and the big swivel chair back of it. She saw the calendar on the wall behind the chair, the big numbers and the Sundays marked with crimson. She sat up with a start, and a worried frown came over her face when something fell to the floor, a coat, a man's coat, grayish tweed with leather buttons. She touched the dull brown stained leather of the couch on which she had been lying.

It was Brady's office. She remembered. She remembered coming in with one of his men and sitting down on the couch, and Brady arriving later. Then she didn't remember any more. But when she had come in, the bright top light had been on, and there was midnight darkness outside. Now the sunshine was streaming through the one window in the room, and the top light was off. Daylight. She must have slept a long time——

Behind her she heard a clock ticking, and she glanced up at the wall. A big clock hung there, its hands pointing to 11. She was on her feet in a moment, and going to the phone on Brady's desk, but as she lifted the receiver the door opened and a girl stepped in.

"You're up then, Miss Fayre."

"Yes, I wondered if I could use the telephone——"

"Mr. Brady wants you to wait for him before you make any calls. He'll be in in a little while." The girl folded up the gray tweed coat. Brenda put back the receiver and went back to the couch.

"Nice morning," the girl said in a friendly way.

"Yes——" But the sunlight that came through the window and flooded the room didn't interest Brenda. She wasn't thinking of the morning. She was thinking of Lally and Brady and Walter—and herself. What was Brady going to do with her, now that he had Walter? For he had him. Three cars had been in the procession last night, Rose's, driven by one of Brady's men with Walter in the tonneau, and Brady beside him; Brady's coupe, driven by another of Brady's men, with Brenda sitting beside him, and another car, a sedan, following the rest, with Rose in it, accompanied by a detective.

Where Walter had been taken, Brenda didn't know. She had been brought to this office by the driver of the car, who stayed with her for half an hour until Brady came——

"What are you going to do with me, Mr. Brady?" That was the second time she had asked that question of him. The first time, too, he had been filling his pipe when she asked it.

"Jason's in the county jail," Brady said, ignoring her question. "He isn't booked on any charge yet, but he's there, and he's not even going to be able to get hold of his lawyer for some time. He's safe, and if he does what I expect him to do we'll have Rush with us in a few days, too. Then our little party will be complete."

"What are you going to do with me?" she repeated dully.

Brady went on as if he hadn't heard her. "He's mighty unhappy there, let me tell you. Mighty unhappy. One of those wise guys who think the law will never catch up with him. I like to catch up with them and watch them cringe. I've watched a good many of them do it. He's going to think he's much wiser pretty soon, because one of the guards is going to him, one of the trusted guards, and tell him that he can get a message out for him for a certain amount of money. Jason's going to fall for the line because he thinks he's wise, and besides he's desperate. And Jason's going to send a message to Rush by the guard, who will bring it to me, and I'm going to get her. Jason won't be able to resist the temptation to let her know where he is. Rush wouldn't. She'd rot in jail under the same circumstances before she'd fall for a gag like Walter Jason is going to. So we'll have Rush soon, and then the case will be closed and I'll go on my vacation."

"Mr. Brady, if you'd only tell me what you're going to do with me!"

"What I'm going to do with you today, you mean?"

"Today—any time."

Wait for Instructions.

"Well, I'd suggest that you go on home, and get yourself fixed up, a shower or something, and your hair done. You don't look in the pink of condition, if I do say it. Then at 6 o'clock tonight, I'd suggest you phone me at Main 2121 for further instructions, and if there are none, call again tomorrow noon promptly, and again at 6 tomorrow night. Keep that up until you get some instructions."

"I can go, then, now?"

"That's what I said, wasn't it?"

She got to her feet unsteadily, and looked around for her hat which she must have put some place last night. Brady pointed to the floor at the head of the couch. "It fell off your head last night and I left it there," he said. "Mirror in the closet if you want it."

"Your friend Rose Washington is also in jail," Brady remarked as she opened the door, "and she's being held incommunicado, too, so you won't be able to see her or talk to her."

Brenda shut the door softly. She was in the hall, but through the frosted glass door she could see the dull blurred profile of Brady, his pipe in his mouth.

Jason Fell.

He saw hers from his side too, as she hesitated for a moment, then he heard her running steps in the corridor, and he took the pipe out of his mouth, and pressed a button on the edge of his desk.

Miller, one of his men, came in and sat down on the couch.

"Jason fall for the line?" Brady demanded.

"Hook, line and sinker. Jumped at it. Willing to pay $500 to get the message through to Rush."

"Did he mention Rush's name?"

"No, but he's getting it ready now. Be up any minute."

The two men sat a while, saying nothing, Brady sucking on his dead pipe and Miller on a dead cigar.

"Good work the Fayre girl did last night." Miller ventured finally. He was the man who had driven her up to the Federal Building, following Brady and Jason. "She's not an ordinary crook, Tim."

Brady said nothing, but he did relight his pipe.

Miller went on. "Took a lot of nerve blowing the horn and turning off the motor. Lots of girls wouldn't have thought of it and, if they had, wouldn't have done it. Jason might have had a gun, you know."

"He isn't the type that carries a gun, Don. She was safe there. Only reason Jason would have a gun would be to shoot himself with, and he's too fond of good living to do that, and too yellow, too. I found a gun in Rush's apartment, though, in the cabinet beside her bed. Wouldn't doubt but what she has one in her purse, too, all the time. She'd shoot if she got the chance."

The phone rang and Brady answered it. While he was talking he was making notes on a pad of paper beside the phone. When he finished his conversation he looked well pleased.

"Jason just came through with his message, and wouldn't you know it would be a telegram! T. E. Chandler, Gotham Hotel, New York. One word only, and no signature. And the one word it, 'Lonely.' Probably a code message indicating he's in trouble." He put his pipe down on the desk and reached for his hat which was near the phone. "I'm off for New York. Flying. Same instructions. Nobody is to see Jason or Washington. Nobody is to know they're in jail. If anything comes up, reach me at the usual place in New York."

"Want me to send the message on?"

"I'll wire or call you from New York if I want it sent on. I'll look over the situation first."

"And the Fayre girl?"

"Im not through with her—yet."

Tongue 'Burn' May Originate In Mental Fear

Ailment Also May Have Basis in Stomach or Mouth.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutler.

Among the many thousands of letters received by this column, a considerable number will mention the symptom of a "burning tongue."

This may be described as "tingling," "smarting" or "soreness." The writer will usually state that the pain comes and goes, varying in severity. Sometimes when the mind is occupied completely with other matters the sensation will disappear, only to return. Most patients will state that hot drinks and highly seasoned foods aggravate the condition.

First of all, care must be taken to rule out actual disease of the tongue or the mucous membrane of the mouth. A careful search must be made for tiny pinpoint ulcers and foci of infection around the teeth and on the gum margins, as well as systemic disease such as tuberculosis, anemia or fungus infections. It is well knewn that the symptom occurs in connection with sprue, pellagra, mild scurvy and whenever the blood drops below normal in the number of cells or hemoglobin. If patches of luceration appear on the tongue exhibits sharply reddened areas, a blood examination should be made, and more often than not some form of anemia will be found to be responsible. The absence of hydrochloric acid in the stomach is a common accompaniment.

Many patients will indicate that on reading an article about cancer, in which attention was called to the dangers of mouth and tongue malignancy, they immediately became conscious of a tingling or burning in the mouth. Certainly fear of cancer is mentioned many times as a possible cause. The patient becomes apprehensive and the slightest twinge or ache anywhere in the body is interpreted as the beginning of this dread disease. This, of course, is purely the result of suggestion, and while we should not be blind to the onset of the disease, we need not harbor cancer phobias.

Sometimes the symptom will arise because of excessive smoking, or more commonly because of bridge work or false teeth. This is not unusual during the first few weeks after the installation of dental work. A rough, jagged tooth is often answerable, and attention to the offending object which the tongue naturally touches and feels thousands of times a day will relieve the annoyance.

Trench mouth (Vincent's angina) and infection of the tonsils, particularly the lymph tissue at the base of the tongue, must be thought of. Again, other cases will be brought on by a true neuritis or neuralgia, which is frequently characterized by intermittent pain, stabbing in character, and affecting but half the tongue.

What to do is the question. Obviously anemia in most instances can be corrected easily and infections within the mouth and about the teeth removed. If the symptoms appears as the result of a true neurosis, re-education is important, plus the use of some mild sedative. Certainly no patient should be dismissed with a wave of the hand and the statement, "It is just your nerves; forget it."

Chiffon Offers Dual-Purpose Summer Frock

Colorful Prints Provide Gowns for Parties and Business Wear.

WITH GARDEN parties pervading the summer social picture, it often is difficult to find a frock that has all the requirements of the occasion and still is versatile enough to wear to business or shopping. Printed chiffon seems to be the ideal answer to the problem—that is, when fashioned along simple lines that gracefully adapt the frock to double duty service.

Next in importance, are the accessories—these tremendous trifles that can make, or mar even the smartest costume iraginable. Large hats, adaptations of the "picture" type are perfect affinities for summer chiffons. Sheer straws are affective in black, or may repeat the predominating tone of the printed dress.

Third Color is Good.

Gloves, handbags and shoes may follow this lead and be chosen in the same color. Or a smart method and an individual one, is to introduce a third color in the accessory theme. A multi-colored chiffon, with brown perdominating, would be chic with brown hat and shoes, and a "blue note" added by way of gloves and bag—that is, if there is a bit of blue in the printed design.

There are hundreds of variations on this color accessory theme, and if a woman is ingenious and possessed of an innate color sense, she can make one frock serve as several, by merely changing or rearranging of the accessory colors. Accessories, were never more important to style than they are this summer, and with so many more varieties from which to make a choice the selection is of paramount imiportance.

With the continued popularity of tinted gloves, hands often carry the burden of adding the one bright spot of color to an otherwise dark or neutral-toned ensemble. With printed chiiffons of the afternoon style, hat, bag and shoes may be in a dark tone and the costume contrasted with brilliant gloves.

Newer and Smarter.

This is considered a newer and smarter idea at present than the more obvious scheme—bright-colored handbags to "spotlight" the picture.

Feet, too, have gone gay and giddy this summer. Shoes of every color of the rainbow now walk with abandon to businiess and social functions, both daytime and evening. One may start with the feet and plan the accessories—choose a color in the prinited frock and then repeat the same tone in the other accessories.

Planniing these garden party-dining-business-shopping ensembles is a lot of fun. And with the mode so flexible and versatile, and so many frocks and accessories in the Washington stores to inspire one the smart woman should be able to plan a number of costumes that serve both for social and business needs.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Brand-New Member of Wanderbirds Hiking Club Finds Members Friendly and Considerate.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: On May 28 there was a letter in your column from one who signed himself "A. R.," in which he states that he has attended 84 hikes sponsored by the Wanderbirds Hiking Club. On Sunday I took my first trip with that group and had a perfectly grand time. I knew only one person in the group, but before long I found myself feeling right at home. Members of the club are very friendly and considerate. Of course I didn't meet all the people there, but the ones I met were all very lovely to me and I appreciated it a great deal.

* * * *

"A. R. states that he has no use for persons who are "inconsiderate, selfish, loud and boisterous, common, vulgar, stupid." Few people care for companions like that. This group proved to me they are not inconsiderate and selfish by the way they received me. Selfish, inconsiderate persons don't bother with strangers. Of course there was quite a bit of noise, but isn't it natural for a group out for pleasure to forget their weekly routine and sing, laugh and be gay? In the whole day's trip I met no one who was common, vulgar or stupid.

* * * *

Most of the young people I have met in Washington are interested in some class or are taking a complete course in one of the schools. I couldn't say definitely, but I imagine if "A. R" were to try to find out, he would learn that a great many of these hikers are "trying to learn and to improve themselves."

My first trip with the Wanderbirds was a huge success. I hope I may have the privilege of going again very soon, and meet all the lovely people I saw Sunday and more of the members. Sincerely, A. S.

DEAR A. S.: I am glad you had such a good time on your initial expedition with the Wanderbirds Hiking Club, and found the members so courteous, congenial and merry. Since I have no acquaintanceship in the group, and have never been on one of its hikes, I am in no position to take sides with or against "A. R." in his implied criticism of some of the members' manners. Having printed his side of the picture, however, I am perfectly willing to give both sides an audience by printing defensive communications such as yours and the one which follows. M. H.

* * * *

Disagrees With "A. R."

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been a participant in the Wanderbird hikes for the past several years and I wish to state that I disagree with "A. R's" criticism of its membership, as implied in his letter published in your column of May 28. I have made many friends in the club membership since I joined. I have enjoyed the jovial conversation and companionship which the hikes provide and have only praise for the good fellowship I have encountered there. I have yet to find a person corresponding to the picture "A. R." paints: "Persons who are habitually inconsiderate, selfish, loud and boisterous, common, vulgar, stupid and with no desire to learn or to improve themselves."

* * * *

If "A. R." has such an attitude toward members of the Wanderbirds Hiking Club, his absence from future expeditions will not be noted. It also seems to me poor policy to criticize a man or woman for smoking during the rest periods of the hikes. "A. R." should be told that some smokers live to a ripe old age. Nature and the out of doors was meant to be enjoyed by all, regardless of their personal habits and idiosyncracies.

* * * *

I am sure that new members as well as old members will agree with me that the Wanderbirds Hiking Club brings out the best there is in outdoor fun. I have enjoyed immensely the short lectures given by the hike leaders, the twilight camp fires, the campfire songs, the Swiss yodelers and all the other things that go to make up an enjoyable hike. Many lonely hearts have found the Wanderbirds Hiking Club an ideal opportunity for companionship and self-improvement. I wish to express my best wishes for the continued success of this club. Sincerely, J. J.

* * * *

DEAR J. J.: You have expressed yourself well, and it is always interesting to get the full picture. I am sure those who enjoy the Wanderbird Hiking Club's expeditions as much as you do will be pleased to read this defense of themselves. With you, I have always inclined to a live-and-let-live policy, so far as the personal habits and idiosyncracies of others are concerned; but I cannot deny that most of the constructive reform in this world has been effected by persons who elected to wade into, rather than walk around, situations which displeased them. M. H.

Would Model Fashions.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl of 16 who is eager to become a fashion model. I have been in four fashion shows in my home town, but I have had no experience modeling clothes in a large store. What I want to know is: how can one acquire the experience to be a model, and what are the requirements a girl must have? Also, in what stores are there models? Yours sincerely, MODEL.

* * * *

DEAR MODEL: I am told a girl who expects to receive serious consideration as a fashion model must have a size 14 figure; an attractive personality, a graceful walk, and a knack of wearing her clothes with that air which makes anything she puts on seem smart to the beholder. I am told, furthermore, that there is no school for models in Washington, and no agency for purveying their services; that your best bet would be to get in personal contact with the heads of advertising departments in the big department stores here, such as Hecht's, The Palais Royal, Woodward & Lothrop's, Kann's, Jelleff's, Lansburgh's, and so on. I am told these stores use as models, girls who are employed in other capacities on their staffs.

* * * *

It would seem, therefore, that your best hope of building up experience as a fashion model in Washington would be to get a job in a local department store, after interesting the advertising department in your modeling possibilities. One other suggestion: Why not approach the fashion editors of the daily newspapers in Washington? They sometimes employ the services of girls to model for fashion photographs. M. H.

The GENTLER SEX . . .

By Malvina Lindsay.

The Men's Movement.

Chairman—Gentlemen, this meeting has been called to do something about men's rights. Has anyone a suggestion?

Mr. Biggar—May I report that I have it on the highest authority that the present persecution of men is inspired by foreign counts. These agitators, I understand, are working sub rosa in tea houses, beauty parlors, dog shoppes, ladies' rest rooms——

Mr. Ruff—Yes, and Little Theaters.

Mr. Biggar— . . . in an organized effort to drive men back to supporting women.

Mr. Wise—All that married women are working for anyway is to buy fur coats.

Mr. Namby—Women are getting bolder every day. You can't stop to look at a street accident that they don't crowd in ahead of you.

Mr. Ruff—They even go to shooting galleries. Men can't have any privacy.

Mr. Perk—I say they ought to be kept from lunch counters. You can't kid a waitress any more—that's all it is, anyway, only kidding—that some old hen at your elbow doesn't glare.

Mr. Speel—May I speak as a husband and a father? Now I honor women. My dear old mother is a woman. My wife—no finer woman ever lived—is a woman. I am for women—but in their proper place.

Mr. Wise—Exactly! No woman has any inventive genius. Why are all the great creators men? I was trying to tell a woman that the other day——

Mr. Ruff—Mr. Chairman, we'll never get anywhere with talk. I am for action. I move we draw up a good stiff bill of rights!

Chorus — SECOND THE MOTION!

Chairman—Any suggestions?

Mr. Biggar—Something should be done to put women in their places in offices. They are gossipy and catty. They take everything too personal. You give a woman a good cussing and she flares up——

Mr. Namby—They should be stoped from mooching cigarettes!

Mr. Close—And made to carry their own matches.

Mr. Piney—And not be allowed to mess up other people's paste pots.

Mr. Perk—Nor borrow fountain pens. If there's one thing I hate to loan——

Mr. Wise—A woman has no sense of property rights. Half the time some woman's sitting in my chair. I know my wife made me a nice little cushion——

Mr. Biggar—They should be stopped from smoking and primping all day in rest rooms.

Mr. Speel—May I speak as one who has always reverenced women? They are all right if you know how to handle 'em. The thing to do is to let 'em think they're running things. I know my wife—and she is an average woman—has to be kidded along.

Mr. Deer—Women should be stopped from slandering married men. They always misunderstand a kiss—or a little kidding. They think every man's trying to make passes at 'em.

Mr. Wise—The trouble with women is that they are too engrosed in sentiment. As the poet said, "Love to a woman——"

Mr. Ruff—Something should be done about the woman road hog. Now the minute I see a car——

Mr. Namby—They ought to have their change ready when they get on street cars and buses——

Mr. Perk—And when they buy movie tickets.

Mr. Biggar — Yes, and they oughtn't to ask so many fool questions at bank windows.

stopped from mooching cigarettes!

gestions. I shall appoint a committee to draw up an ultimatum. Mr. Ruff, will you be chairman——

Mr. Ruff—Just a minute! I'm leaving town tonight. I've got to see a man——

Chairman—All right, then, Mr. Speel——

Mr. Speel—I'm sorry, but I've got to have my tonsils out——

Chairman—Mr. Biggar?

Mr. Biggar—Mr. Chairman, I've just received word that my wife's sister has fallen in a well——

Mr. Deer—I move we apoint a secret committee to investigate and report back.

Chorus—AYE! AYE!

Summer Comfort Is Said to Depend On Mental Outlook

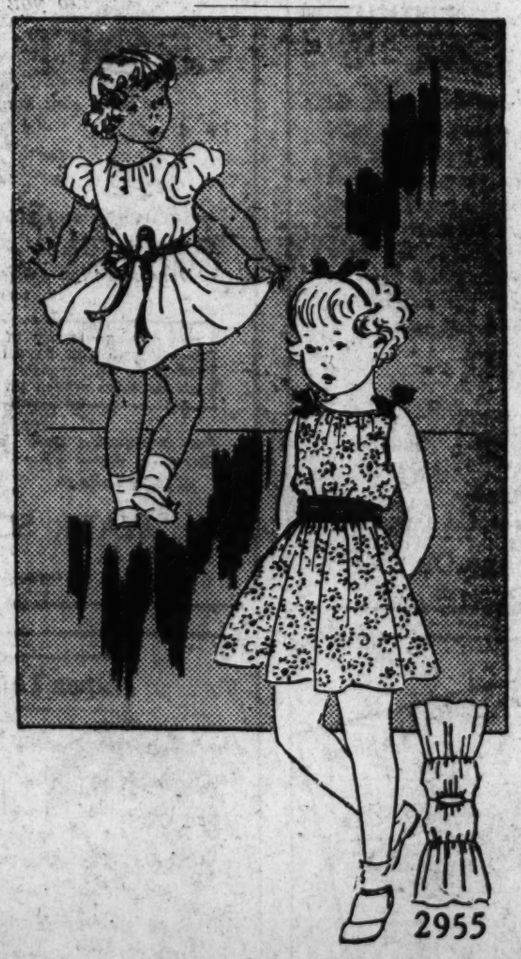
Whether you keep cool this summer rests more with your mental outlook than with the thermometer. The normal person can get the better of the heat, instead of letting it get the better of him, in the opinion of Dr. John P. H. Murphy, psychiatrist at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Comparative comfort—even in sweltering Washington weather—is largely a matter of one's viewpoint, he believes. Science Service quotes him as follows:

"There is no doubt that heat affects the body. "Perspiration is annoying. A humid atmosphere is quite severe on those suffering from certain ailments. As a result of physical discomforts, persons do become languid, restless and smometimes irritable.

"The middle-of-the-road philosphy is a good one for hot weather. To slow up and take things easy is the ideal—if you can afford it. In any case, most people can get more comfort on very hot days by not working too fast and too furiously."

Adorable Dress for Little Girls Can Be Made Either Pert or Puffy



By Laura I. Baldt, A. M.

For many years assistant professor of household arts, Teachers College, Columbia University, N. Y.

SUCH A DARLING little frock is patterned for today. And to make it! Practically a two-piece skirt to be gathered and joined to the two-piece sleeveles bodice. Or it may have tiny puffed sleeves to show off her chubby arms.

Picture your little girl in this adorable dress in crisp organdie showing yellow daisies on a white ground. The bias bindings at the neck and armholes are plain toning yellow organdie. Pert bows of plain yellow organdie decorate each shoulder. And it has a matching sash. The bows and sash may be finished with self binds or picot-edged.

Style No. 2955 is designed for sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Size 4 requires 1¼ yards of 39-inch material with 1 yard of 2-inch ribbon for shoulder bows with 1 yard of 4-inch ribbon for sash.

Send ten cents (10c) (coin is preferred) for pattern. Write plainly your name, address and style number. Be sure to state size you wish.

Avoid Etiquette Blunders

HORACE AND Marian are guests of Aunt Cynthia, and here he is, grandly seating Mildred at Aunt Cynthia's dinner table.

Aunt Cynthia is astonished. He didn't know enough to seat ar older woman first!

"Horace, Marian's coming up for my dance!" Mildred babbles. Not a word on topics interesting to Aunt Cynthia.

The pair unfold their napkins with a flourish, and spread them out like old-fashioned lap-robes. As Aunt Cynthia lays hers half-folded across her lap, she studies her guests, amazed.

Mildred pours a little pile of salt on the table-cloth, dabs radishes into it, leaving pink stains. Horace reaches for a roll and breaks it into his soup! To finish off, he explores his back teeth with his tongue—looks like a squirrel cracking a nut.

Aunt Cynthia's much too kind to lecture her young guests together. But she will have a serious talk with Mildred alone. The penalties of bad manners are too severe to risk. Mildred and Horace will be outsiders, shunned by cultivated people!

Avoid such damaging blunders with the help of our 40-page illustrated booklet, ETIQUETTE FOR EVERY DAY. Just what you want to know—good form in public, etiquette for hotels, restaurants, theaters. How to introduce people smoothly, enter a room gracefully, take leave courteously, write correct letters, be sure of your table manners.

Send 15 cents for our booklet, Etiquette for Every Day, to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Ninteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

$200,000 Left American U. For New Hall

Miss Simpson Wills Her Fortune for Memorial Building to Parents.

Will Be Devoted to Study of International Affairs and Social Science.

A bequest, estimated at $200,000, for the construction of a Hall of Nations to be used for the study of international affairs and social science has been accepted by American University, Chancellor Joseph M. M. Gray announced yesterday.

The university's benefactor is the late Sarah Elizabeth Simpson, of Philadelphia, who bestowed her Pittsburgh estate to the local school for the new building. The Hall of Nations is to be erected as a memorial to Miss Simpson's parents, Bishop and Mrs. Matthew Simpson. Bishop Simpson was a leader in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

While the erection of the new hall will be delayed, pending settlement of the Simpson estate, Chancellor Gray said yesterday the university already has an available site. This is at the school's downtown center at Nineteenth and F streets northwest.

Stimson Chairman.

Henry L. Stimson, former Secretary of State, has accepted the chairmanship of the advisory committee to erect and administer the memorial. Ellery C. Stowell, chairman of the department of national affairs, American University, will serve as executive secretary.

Through the memorial project the university will anticipate bringing together in Washington students and professors from other universities throughout the world to study American institutions and to "transmit a better knowledge of their own culture institutions and aims."

Already Chancellor Gray has invited each of the diplomatic representatives in Washington to accept an honorary chairmanship of a committee for his nation. These committees are to be constituted from individuals interested in developing social and educational relations with each country. Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador, is among those who have already accepted the invitation.

Students to Be Invited.

Advanced students in international affairs and social science are to be invited from States throughout the Union. Distinguished professors will be invited to lecture.

The advisory committee also plans to arrange for scholarships for American students abroad.

On former Secretary Stimson's committee are:

Raymond L. Buell, New York, president, Foreign Policy Association; Stephen Duggan, director, Institute of International Education, New York; Allen W. Dulles, New York, former chief of the division of Near Eastern Affairs, Department of State; Clark M. Eichelberger, director, League of Nations Association, Chicago; Alanson B. Houghton, Washington, former Ambassador to Great Britain; Walter H. Mallory, executive director, Council of Foreign Relations, New York; Hunter Miller, historical adviser, Department of State; Leo S. Rowe, director general, Pan-American Union; Dr. James Brown Scott, professor of international law, Georgetown University, and secretary, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; James T. Shotwell, New York, director, division of economics, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace; Alva C. Wilgus, associate professor Hispanic-American studies, George Washington University, and director of the Center of Inter-American studies; Herbert Wright, professor of international law and head of the department of politics, Catholic University, Washington.

Phillips Urges Spiritual Life On G. W. Class

'Man's Soul Is Man's Life, Senate Chaplain Says in Baccalaureate.

The Rev. Ze Barney Phillips, chaplain of the United States Senate and pastor of the Church of the Epiphany, last night told members of George Washington University's class of 1936 to look for things spiritual in their lives to find real happiness.

He preached the baccalaureate sermon at the National Cathedral.

Several hundred were present at the services in addition to the graduates.

"I suggest to you one thing," he advised. 'Listen to your souls.

"Then fleeting shadows and darknesses will pass away. I pray each of you will have a spiritual vision which will be a dominant factor in your lives.

"I hope that vision will shape itself until the very heaven of heavens opens up above you.

"I tell you a man's soul is a man's life."

He told the graduates they now had the advantages of a modern education and they should couple this advantage with a spiritual outlook on life to attain real happiness in life.

Services were opened last night with a processional hymn. The graduates—several hundred of them—filed into the great choir of the Cathedral, dressed in cap and gown.

A choir, composed of members of the George Washington University Glee Club and under the direction of Robert Howe Harmon, led the music.

The Rev. Freeland Peter, chancellor of the Cathedral, conducted the services.

Class day exercises will be held tomorrow when various awards are presented outstanding students, advised. "Listen to your soul, held Wednesday at 8 p. m. in Constitution Hall. President Cloyd Heck Marvin will confer the degree.

Many View Post's Latest Model Home

A large number of persons attended the opening of the latest Washington Post model home yesterday in Burnt Mills Hills. It is a development of the R. E. Latimer Co., of which Maj. Phil D. Poston is sales director.

Burnt Mills Hills is situated on the Colesville pike, three miles beyond Silver Spring, Md. The model home and the community it features may be seen by driving out to the traffic light at Silver Spring and out Colesville road, three miles to the property. The house will be open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m.

The home, furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon, has for its setting an acre and a half of ground in a development of 125 acres of natural rolling countryside, divided into sites of from one to five acres.

Father of Seven Kills Self in Takoma Park

Jacob Wingo, 39, father of seven children, last night committed suicide by hanging himself in the bathroom of his home at 204½ Alleghany avenue, Takoma Park, Md. He had been unemployed for some time.

One of his sons heard noises in the bathroom and called his mother, who discovered the body. The Takoma Park rescue squad was summoned, but efforts to revive Wingo were fruitless.

150 Youngsters Are Examined Preparatory to Camp Opening

Children Undergo Tests at Jewish Center, 'Wager' on Pounds to Be Gained During Season in Chopawamsic Area, Starting July 6.

In preparation for the opening July 6 of a camp in the Chopawamsic area, near Dumphries, Va., for Jewish children, 150 boys and girls between the ages of 8 and 13 yesterday morning underwent free physical examination at the Jewish Community Center.

The camp, to be known as Center Camp, is being established in connection with the Jewish Community Center's child health program.

Some of the youngsters yesterday walked as much as 6 miles, getting to the place of examinations and then home again. About nine-tenths of those who appeared at the center never have been to a camp before.

Most of the girls seem to be taking an intensely practical view of the experience in store for them.

One thin but lovely looking child of 9, when asked what she was looking forward to most—games, new friendships, athletics, nature study or handicrafts—widened her eyes and said a little breathlessly:

"I'm looking forward most to getting healthy."

Other girls took up the cry. They talked among themselves without a trace of self-consciousness of the defects the examining physicians had found; eyes that need glasses, teeth that should be filled, small bodies that are woefully underweight. Some of the children were making wagers on how many pounds they'll gain.

Only one, a curly-haired sprite, announced modestly that she had been found "practically perfect." She thinks the most thrilling thing in prospect for her is meeting "lots and lots of new girls."

The boys were inclined to view the whole thing in a more romantic light. A lad of 12 said he was excited and pleased about going to camp because he wanted "to learn how to be an Indian." Rumors of a course to be given in Indian lore evidently had got around.

Another boy said he is looking forward to learning about birds and trees and flowers.

"There aren't many in the Southeast," he explained gravely.

But whether or not the youngsters themselves are aware of it, health is the biggest reward the camp hopes to offer. For eight weeks, beginning July 6, the children will go to the Chopawamsic area in groups of 100 or so. The ones most in need of camp life will be permitted to stay the entire eight weeks. Others will come back to Washington after two or three weeks.

The entire program is expected to cost $7,500.

Three Festivals Set For Sylvan Theater

Three festival programs will be presented this month at the National Sylvan Theater in the Washington Monument grounds through the co-operation of the Community Center Department and the Office of National Capital Parks, beginning Tuesday night, June 16.

At that time the Estelle Wentworth Opera group will offer Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Gondoliers." The performance is scheduled to begin at 8:30.

The following Tuesday, June 23, the Blackfriars Guild will give "Smilin' Thru." On the last Tuesday night in the month, June 30, the drama group of the Federal Bureau of Investigation will present a drama, "Pierre Patelin." Each performance will be preceded by a half-hour concert of instrumental music by service bands and private orchestras.

Bishop Ordains 4 to Diaconate In Trinity Rites

Four young men were ordained to the diaconate yesterday by Bishop James E. Freeman in the Great Choir of Washington Cathedral as the church observed Trinity Sunday and Holy Communion.

The candidates recently completed preparation for holy orders in theological seminaries. They are:

Clarence Alfred Cole, James Lawrence Plumley, Gustavus William Buchholz, jr., and Decius Wade Safford.

Plumley, who will enter the ministry as a communicant in the Trinity Episcopal Church in Trinity Park, is the son of Mrs. Wallace Plumley, sr., and the late Mr. Plumley, who for many years was an attorney in this city.

Cole is a member of St. Mark's Parish. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Cole, 621 A street southeast.

Buchholz was born in Ridgewood, N. J., in 1908. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Buchholz, now live at 2248 Cathedral avenue northeast. He is a member of St. Alban's Parish.

Safford was born in Washington. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Safford, of 3339 Mount Pleasant street northwest. He was graduated this year from General Theological Seminary, New York City.

Bishop Freeman preached the ordination sermon. He spoke again at the Evensong service at 4 o'clock.

Board Seeks Test in Court On Jobs Law

Firm to Be Pressed for Tax Payment, Paving Way for Suit.

Employers Challenging Levy Upon Pay Rolls As Illegal.

The Unemployment Compensation Board is planning to invite a test case of the District unemployment compensation law to meet the challenge of a considerable number of employers who have refused to make pay-roll tax payments.

An attempt will be made this week to audit the books of one firm which verbally has refused to pay the 1 per cent tax on the pay roll prescribed by the compensation law in effect since January 1. The attempt is to be made in such a way that refusal will provide grounds for taking the case to the courts.

This first step in defending the constitutionality of the law probably will be taken while John A. Marshall, director of the board, is in St. Paul, Minn., where he went recently to attend a gathering of insurance officials. Elwood Seal, assistant corporation counsel, and who has been acting as counsel for the unemployment commission, is to conduct the fight.

Due to Confusion.

Several thousand employers in the District have failed to report to the commission and to pay taxes. Most of these failures, Marshall believes, are due to confusion because of differences in local and Federal laws. A number of employers, however, have challenged the constitutionality of the law.

Meanwhile, District officials are wondering what can be done to enable the District itself to conform to provisions of the law. Comptroller General McCarl recently ruled that the District had no appropriation from which it could draw to meet the unemployment compensation obligations. Per diem workers employed less than ten months a year and employes who do not qualify under the present retirement law must be provided for under the terms of the unemployment compensation act.

Trying to Dodge.

Not wishing to confront Congress with the fact that it had failed to provide funds for the District to carry out a prescribed duty, the Commissioners, and consequently the Compensation Board, are trying to dodge the problem. The Commissioners fear first that Congress would not consider any proposal they might make, and second, that any such suggestion would be turned to the disadvantage of the District in the controversy over next year's appropriation bill.

Juror Stricken, Panel Locked Up

A District of Columbia Supreme Court jury trying seven men on charges of attempting to defraud the Government in connection with a $4,853,000 Willacy County (Tex.) irrigation project was locked up until today after one of the jurors became ill early yesterday.

The case has been in the jury's hands since Friday afternoon.

The defendants were William A. Harding, former member of the Willacy District Board; Frank P. McElwrath, Corsicana (Tex.) contractor; Perry A. Welty and Charles A. Olberg, former Public Works Administration engineers, and L. C. Hammond, H. W. Coole and James P. Barry, San Francisco lumbermen.

Not the Capture of a Python

Firemen are not hauling in a huge jungle snake. They are pulling a hose across the C. & O. Canal to extinguish a fire between the canal and the Potomac.

Firemen Man Boat, Quell Blaze In Canal; Get Wet, Thrill Crowd

Five Companies Respond to Call, Decide to Put Out Driftwood Fire Rather Than Face Prospect of Future Alarms.

It was only a driftwood fire. And there was no damage—and no one was hurt.

But more than a score of firemen with five engines weren't through with the job until they—

Got a row boat.

Negotiated the Chesapeake Canal.

Got wet.

Gave a crowd of Sunday afternoon motorists the thrill of watching firemen take to water.

A local alarm sent five companies, under Chief Chris Bartelmus, thundering out Canal road before the hour of sunset yesterday. About two miles west of Georgetown they saw a column of thick-green smoke rising off the banks of the Potomac.

But no one could see the fire. The canal kept all away and woods along the bank abscured the view. There was time for all five companies and the crowd of passing autoists to assemble at the vantage pointh along the canal before one fireman, who had found a boat down the canal, returned from his scouting trip and shouted across the water:

"It's only driftwood."

"It's driftwood," responded the chief.

"It's just driftwood," murmured the specators.

"What'll we do?" queried the scout.

"If we don't put it out now, some one will send in an alarm in the middle of the night. We'll put the fire out now. Get a boat."

A truck from No. 5' swept down the road toward Chain Bridge and returned presently with a rowboat aboard.

Meanwhile, after several attempts, a lifeline was thrown over the canal, and hose—50 yards or so—was towed over the water, and across the river lowland to the blaze.

The boat was lowered over the canal wall, and four firemen, used to climbing ladders, descended one to board the craft.

The boat moved across the long-since quieted channel. It approached the other side.

Fireman No. 1, in the stern, thought he'd leap to the bank. He did. He landed.

But his action caused the bow, where Fireman No. 4 was sitting, to dip below the water line.

That is how one man—No. 4—got wet.

The crowd thought this was funny. But No. 4, recovering from his partial immersion, hurried to his post at the hose nozzle. The fire was put out.

Five companies of men recoiled their hose, mounted their fire trucks, and rode back to town, assured the prospects of a "quiet" evening had greatly improved.

Baccalaureate Speaker Warns Of Despotism

Catholic University graduates, at their baccalaureate service yesterday morning in the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, were warned of the dictatorship that is clamped on universities in countries where despotism reigns.

The Rev. Patrick J. Healy, professor of church history at the University, who gave the sermon, said, "Conditions in Russia point to what will inevitably be the lot of all universities, where government falls under the control of a political party or a dictator."

"It seems incredible," Father Healy said, "that despotism should go so far as to declare that the principles of a political party rest on absolute truth, and that learning, in order to be acceptable, must fit into the program of a political system."

The baccalaureate mass opened the university's week of commencement activities. The Rt. Rev. Joseph M. Corrigan, rector of the university, celebrated the mass, and other officers included the Rev. Lambert C. Gattman, deacon; the Rev. Paul F. Speckbough, sub-deacon, and the Rev. Edward Roelker, master of ceremonies.

Man Arrested As Murderer In Italy in '09

Resident of Northwest Denies Allegation He Killed Merchant.

Police Awaiting Action of Roman Embassy on Extradition.

Santo Pennetsri, 55, of 732 Fifth street northwest, was arrested at his home early yesterday in connection with the murder 27 years ago of a merchant in his native Italy.

Police began search here for the man when an anonymous letter was received by District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett in 1935 informing him that Pennestri, alias Antonio De Metrio Antonia, was wanted by authorities in the Province of Reggio Calabria for murder in 1909.

Searching old records in the identification bureau police found fingerprints and a photograph of the man. He had been arrested here in 1919 for stabbing and again in 1933 for arson, police said. He was cleared of both charges.

The fingerprint record and photograph were sent to the Italian police commissioner in Rome. A reply was received several weeks ago saying Pennestri was wanted for investigation in the murder.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, and members of the "pickup" squad arrested the man yesterday. He denied knowledge of the crime to police.

Thompson said the man is an alien and that immigration officials were notified. The Immigration Bureau, however, said there is no action it can take, because the man was in the country prior to 1924, when the deportation law governing aliens was passed.

Pending further instructions from Rome, Pennestri was being held on a technical charge of investigation. The Italian Embassy and the State Department were notified of his arrest.

Police were without details of the alleged crime. They said arrangements for extradition, if any, would be made through the State Department and the embassy.

Church Approves Change of Name

By a unanimous vote at yesterday morning's service, members of Cleveland Park Congregational Church voted to change the name of their parish to the Cleveland Park Community Church.

The members acted on a resolution presented by Dr. William C. Ruediger, chairman of the board.

"The change in name in no way affects our status in the Congregational denomination," the Rev. Joseph S. Loughran, pastor, explained.

"We will continue to function in that organization. The change was made simply because members of our church feel we function as a community group. Many men and women who attend the church belong to other denominations."

The Cleveland Park church, one of the younger Protestant congregations in the city, has been growing steadily. It now has more than 300 members.

Blaze Kills Woman

Ruth Smothers, 31, colored, of Ken-Gar, Md., near Kensington, was burned to death early yesterday morning when her two-story wooden home went up in flames. The fire started in her room on the second floor and spread so rapidly firemen were unable to reach her.

Young Thief Uses Ancient Ruse; Flees as Pursuers Gather Loot

After snatching $84 from the counter at the Lincoln Park car barn, an 8-year-old boy yesterday won a foot race for freedom by means of the same tactics which once defeated Atalanta, the Greek princess.

The boy appeared at the car barn just as Otis L. Hinson, Capital Transit Co. car conductor, was turning in his receipts for the day. There was a flash of arm, a patter of feet and the lad was off with a tray containing the money.

Hinson and other conductors gave chase, but made a fatal error when they paused to pick up bills which the boy cast behind him. They retrieved $14 that way, but lost their quarry.

When last seen the boy was running west on B street southeast. Police want him on charges of grand larceny.

Former Fighter Hopes to Write Real Ring Yarn

Fidel La Barba on Fox Lot; 'Woiking Goils' Go Ritz; Hollywood Notes.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, June 7.—Fidel La Barba, undefeated former flyweight champion, has gone into training in the Twentieth Century-Fox story department to write the great American prize-fight picture.

"All the fight pictures I've ever seen look hokumey," explained La Barba, a swarthy, bushy-haired, Goliath in the miniature, leaning over a battered typewriter and pulling at an oversized pipe.

"They tell me the secret of good movies is to make everybody put himself in the hero's place—sort of live it. Well, movie fights don't make a guy in the audience feel like a fighter, and if I can just learn enough, I think I can do that.

"Its a queer feeling being in the ring with a tough opponent, but not quite the way you feel when watching a close fight. You're sort of excited deep inside, except that training gives you a coolness that covers it like a shell.

"I think I can put it over eventually. It may take a long time and a lot of hard work, but that's why I'm here."

Has Been Free-Lance.

Since his retirement from the ring three years ago, La Barba has worked on a Los Angeles newspaper and done free-lance writing. Recently he confided his picture ambitions to Darryl F. Zanuck ("I used to box with him at the Los Angeles Athletic Club when we were kids"), and was given a job as reader.

It is his job to read and summarize all stories submitted to the studio—a long, gruelling task, but La Barba thinks it will teach him plot construction. Later he'll graduate to screen writing.

Ring injuries some time ago threatened La Barba with loss of sight in his left eye, but he says he has that licked.

Swanky "Slums!"

You may notice when you see "Never Gonna Dance," that Ginger Rogers and Helen Broderick set a new standard of living for "woiking goils." They play instructors in a dance hall, and are carted to their hall bedroom "home" in a shiny taxi by Fred Astaire.

Scene showing the taxi pulling up in front of the tenement is shot indoors, and the across-the-way-background is "processed" in by a motion picture of a New York street. The street is tony Park Avenue at Forty-fourth!

As a vehicle for Allan Jones or Nelson Eddy, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has purchased "Troubadour in Trouble," an original musical by Franz Shulz and Jay Gorney.

From Slapstick to Sublimity.

Hal Roach, who has produced 1,095 two-reel comedies in 22 years, says he has done his last one, believe it or not. The end-product was "Hill Tillies," featuring Lyda Roberti and Patsy Kelly. Roach is going in for feature-length productions from now on, but will continue to make "Our Gang" one-reelers.

Ross Alexander is the latest filmster to bid for an interest in a prizefighter's contract. He wants to help manage Benny Barrish, a 130-pounder whom he saw scrap in Oakland, Calif., recently.

Other notable film patrons of the fight game are Mae West, George Raft, Bing Crosby and Pat O'Brien.

Little

"SMILIN' THROUGH." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturisation of the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin, adapted to screen by Ernest Vajda and Claudine West, starring Norma Shearer, Fredric March and Leslie Howard, with the late O. P. Heggie, Ralph Forbes, Beryl Mercer, Mararet Seddon and Forrester Harvey. Directed by Sidney Franklin. A revival.

Successful on the Broadway stage as one of the most charming of the gossamer romances in which Jane Cowl ever has appeared, a sensational triumph as a silent picture starring Norma Talmadge, "Smilin' Through," as picturized in the form of an audible as well as visual delight by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, yesterday renewed its appeal to the gentler emotions as the week's feature of the screen bill at the Little Theater.

The purling love story of two generations, with its counterpointed action, gentle sentiment and jealous frenzy, needs no recapitulation at this late date. It is a sufficient earnest of the effectiveness with which a tender and appealing story is brought to the silver sheet to recall that in the present version it is enacted by a stellar cast, led by Norma Shearer, in the role of Kathleen; Fredric March, as Kenneth Wayne, and Leslie Howard, as John Carteret.

Supplementing the superb performances of this pivotal trio are such distinguished players as the late O. P. Heggie, one of the gentlest of the theater's artists; Ralph Forbes, Beryl Mercer, Forrester Harvey and Washington's own Margaret Seddon.

As an item of contrasting hilarity, the Little this week is presenting as a companion piece of humor Robert Benchley's amusing camera study of "How to Sleep," an Academy prize-winner. Added short-reels and pictured news events complete a program that is wholly admirable.

About the Showshops

SKEPTICISM frequently expressed to this column as to the probable merit of film entertainment to be expected on the Washington screens during the heated term gives rise to the belief that the old bugaboo of the "summer slump," that dates back to the days of silent pictures and the years B. A. C. (before air conditioning), still lingers in public consciousness. Now that the motion picture theaters are apt to be the most comfortable places in town when the weather is the hottest, there is no longer need to fear any diminution in quality of the celluloid fare set before the Capital's discriminating theatergoers.

BELL.

Particularly is this true with regard to the summer roster of screen features made available to the Earle and Metropolitan theaters by an announcement made last week from the Warner Brothers-First National sales convention in New York City. Of the 14 films scheduled for the summer season, seven are special productions representing vast investments of money, time and talent. These seven specials are:

"The White Angel," with Kay Francis playing the role of Florence Nightingale, who was the first to perceive the need of women nurses on the battlefields of the world.

"Bullets and Ballots," in which Edward G. Robinson assumes the role of a New York detective at grips with the crime syndicate.

"Hearts Divided," co-starring Marion Davies and Dick Powell, already booked for the Earle the week of June 19.

"China Clipper," a self-descriptive item, with Pat O'Brien and Beverly Roberts in the leads. Miss Roberts, it will be recalled, made an auspicious debut with Al Jolson in "The Singing Kid."

"Hard Luck Dame," a new Bette Davis vehicle, with Warren William and Marie Wilson.

"Anthony Adverse," the gelatin transcription of Hervey Allen's monumental fiction, with Fredric March in the name role.

"Public Enemy's Wife," another self-explanatory title, with Pat O'Brien and Margaret Lindsay featured.

There isn't a summer slump in a carload of pictures like that!

• • • •

Since that date of June 19 and "Hearts Divided," at the Earle, has come up, it is interesting to note that the stage bill for that week will be headlined by that droll comedian, Edgar Kennedy, in person. Long co-starred with Florence Lake in short-reel, domestic comedies, Kennedy more and more of late has been taking his place among the more effective of the comic character actors in feature-length productions. He was seen recently as the yacht captain in "Small Town Girl," as the character who finally married Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray in "The Bride Comes Home" and, this week, is manager of the opera company in which Mary Ellis is star, in "Fatal Lady." Mr. Kennedy, in association with Patricia Allwyn, will be seen on the Earle stage in a specially written skit. It will be his first appearance in Washington.

• • • •

Katharine Cornell is up to her old tricks. In eight performances of George Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan," in the Boston Opera House, she played to a net of $38,763. With the Federal tax added, the public paid a total of $42,639.30 for the eight presentations of Shaw's best play. Her previous record for the same number of performances was made with "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" in the smaller Forrest Theater in Philadelphia, when the receipts were $33,657. This has all been achieved without the supposed advantage of a motion picture "following" or a radio "audience."

So what? So the living theater is dead!

• • • •

Negotiations that have been completed at this end await only New York approval to insure the presentation of Shakespeare's "Macbeth," the WPA colored actors' project that has been an overwhelming success in New York, in the Belasco Theater for one week, beginning Friday, June 26. Enjoying a successful downtown Broadway engagement in New York, "Macbeth" subsequently moved into the LaFayette Theater in Harlem for a run. The company of 127 players, if they come to Lafayette Square here, will bring their own complete production and lighting equipment, which is sufficiently complex to require four switchboards.

• • • •

Alec Templeton, the blind pianist in Jack Hylton's "Continental Revue," at the Earle, was born in Cardiff, Wales, and began playing the piano at the precocious age of 3. Still in his twenties, he is known throughout England as one of its foremost pianist-composers. He has graduated with honors from two colleges of music—Worchester College, in Wales, and the Royal Academy of Music, in London. While a student of the classics, Templeton possesses an amazing grasp of the theory and execution of jazz interpretations. To know this, one has only to listen to his playing simultaneously of four selections nominated by the audience.

• • • •

That comical "end man" in the Hylton Orchestra, who plays a clairnet and saxophone at the same time and later plays a sax while balancing a cello on his forehead, neck down (the cello's), is Freddy Schweitzer. And is he a card!

• • • •

Preserving-the-Eternal-Unities Note.

Schweitzer, almost needless to remark, is sandwiched in between other well-bred acts!

Dancing School Stages Revue Of 90 Routines

Hoffmans Produce Year-End Demonstrations at National.

In two acts and ten major scenes, the Hoffman School of Dancing presented last evening at the National Theater its year's-end production, a "Black and White Revue," before a large and responsive audience.

Staged under the direction of Lillian and Jack Hoffman, with costumes designed by Mrs. Hoffman, the revue offered some 90 routines in solo, small group, and ensemble numbers, representing a wide diversity of dance forms, with tap, acrobatic, and toe demonstrations predominating.

Of the many scenes, all of which were presented with technical care and precision, the "Indian Color Change" was, perhaps, the most effective, offering the beginners and intermediate classes in a typical war dance, Gloria Kenney in a left-handed bow-and-arrow acrobatic routine, Zoe McComb in an exquisite toe number, and a rarely performed adagio dance with Doris Hudson being tossed around by Jack Stake and Bill Shirah.

Other numbers of note were the acrobatics of Mildred Fredericks and especially) Helen Fay Smith, the toe numbers of Constance Grady and Patsy Conners, the tap routines of Mary Ellen Enyart, Dolores Deneham, Emma Rhodes and Lillian Hoffman, and the modernistic ballet.

Among the others appearing on the program were:

Norma Jean Hungerford, Meatrict Goodman, Phoebe Johnson, Phyllis McIntire, Dorothea Shah, Constance Robertson, Gladys Marshall, Ann Kraft, Anne Smith, Helen Rose Fortinberry, Mae Jacobs, Ruby Hurowitz, Nancy Hamilton, Joan Turner, Virginia Thomas, June Mosburg, Barbara Freeman.

Joanne Desiree Kreps, Doris Luckett, Patsy Maloney, Patsy Schick, Marianne McCarty, Patricia Mullen, Betsy Jane Ramer, Joan Carol Ostrow, Nancy Ford, Mary Lou Herrold, Jean Ann Topham, Joan Seyfried.

Minter Lawsuit Reported Settled

Los Angeles, June 7 (AP).—Mary Miles Minter, a star of the silent screen days, and her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, were silent today on published reports that their $750,000 civil suit against Blyth & Co., a brokerage firm, had been settled out of court.

Norman Sterry, attorney for the brokerage firm, admitted a settlement had been, or was being made. He said he did not know whether the projected agreement had been signed.

"But I am sure I should have been notified if it had not been," he added.

The Los Angeles Examiner and the Los Angeles Times both said the suit is expected to be dismissed when the court hearing is resumed tomorrow.

The Examiner said the brokerage company had agreed to pay the plaintiffs between $100,000 and $125,000.

The suit was an outgrowth of admitted defalcations of Leslie B. Henry, former resident partner of the brokerage concern and one-time president of the Pasadena Tournament of Roses Association. He now is serving a term in San Quentin Prison. In 1932, Henry confessed he had absconded with large amounts of securities originally the property of Miss Minter and her mother.

WPA Wages Held Blocking Recovery

Baltimore, June 7 (AP).—W. A. Klinger, of Sioux City, Iowa, president of the Associated General Contractors of America, complained today that a continuation of "attractive" Government relief wages is causing workmen to refuse other jobs and thereby blocking recovery.

"Once again," Klinger asserted in an article in the Manufacturers Record, "The Government makes it impossible for private industry to recover."

He said a year ago "wide publicity" was give nassurances by the President that relief wages would be lowered so the work would not be made attractive, but "not so wide has been the publicity concerning the retraction of that statement."

He contended the relief-pay scale gives the workman his choice of "working' under a contractor or "actually loafing under WPA with steady time."

"The workman is not a fool," he said. "He makes the choice you and I would make. The private contractor cannot stand Government WPA competition for the services of the workman, and the situation becomes unbearable."

Murphy Returns to Talk Over Philippine Tariff

San Pedro, Calif., June 7 (AP).—Frank Murphy, United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Commonwealth, arrived from Manila today en route toWashington for conferences with President Roosevelt.

Star of Drama, Opera and Cinema

A new singing star of the first rank comes to the screen in "Fatal Lady," now on view as chief film feature of the week at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. She is Mary Ellis, already known to Washington audiences for her performances on the stage of the living theater, whose career also embraces a considerable experience in grand opera. A new and striking portrait study of Miss Ellis appears above. The identity of the bronzed lady on the left is unknown.

Stories About the Pictures You're Seeing

Hollywood, June 7.

"FURY." This picture, originally called "The Mob," and then "Mob Rule"—both titles rejected by the Hays office—was intended to be a play by Author Norman Krasna. He had the idea when he went to Broadway for the opening of his vehicle, "Small Miracle." He was told by many that the idea would not make a salable play.

SYLVIA SYDNEY.

Krasna had told the idea to Joseph Mankiewicz, a writer at Metro. Later, Mankiewicz was elevated to the post of producer. He was looking for an important picture to make for his initial production. He remembered Krasna's story. He persuaded Metro to permit him to produce this antilynching propaganda flicker.

Then Mankiewicz told Krasna he wanted to buy his yarn, "The Mob." Krasna had only his notes. He told the story to Mankiewicz, who had a secretary take it down in shorthand. This is how Krasna sold an important original story without writing a line on paper.

The Krasna play differed in many details from the screen fare, "Fury." Norman's notes had the characters portrayed by Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sidney, on their honeymoon in the Ford when Tracy was picked up and tossed in jail as one of the kidnapers. The ending was also different. Spencer Tracy didn't walk into the courtroom and confess. He waited until the 22 men were to be hanged from trees at 15 minute intervals before he came on the scene; not to give himself up, but merely to show he was confident that he had done right. It is the lawyer who then states that according to the law the men can't be hanged. And the final line had Tracy saying: "But they killed my dog."

The picture was directed by Fritz Lang, who was brought to this country because he directed, "M," with Peter Lorre. This is Lang's first American flicker. He had been waiting to do a picture.

Lang is a tall, grim appearing Austrian who is barred in Germany. He always wears a monocle. Before he became a director, he sold picture postcards, which he painted, in the cafes of Brussels. He then studied art in Munich, and later went to Paris as a fashion designer. After the war he became a writer for the German Film Co. Decla. Then he became a director.

Fritz Lanr is an eracting director—a driver. He would work his troupe from 8 o'clock in the morning until 2 o'clock the next morning. As for being exacting, take the scene in which Spencer Tracy arrives home after putting Sylvia Sidney on the train.

Director Lang arranged that room to loow mussed up. He himself crumpled the newspapers and scattered them. He poured beer over some of the paper, as Tracy might have done, to make everything look realistic. Sylvia Sidney, a good actress, admitted that this was one of the few outstanding roles she has had in motion pictures. Her escort before she got the role, and after it, is Norman Krasna. He had told her about the part and she was delighted that she had gotten it.

Director Fritz Lang and Producer Joe Mankiewicz had a fight before the picture was completed. After the preview, Lang was sitting in the Brown Derby with Marlene Dietrich. Mankiewiscz walked over to Lang and offered to shake hands. Lang refused.

Girl Is Missing At Alexandria; U. S. Aid Asked

Washington and Virginia Police Open Hunt for Landon Burke.

Police of Washington and Virginia last night were hunting 15-year-old Landon Mason Burke, who disappeared from the home of her socially-prominent parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Taylor Burke, of 719 Prince street, Alexandria, about 4:30 p. m. Saturday.

The girl had returned to Alexandria only a few days ago from Richmond, where she attended St. Catherine's School for Girls. Her father is head of the Burke & Herbert banking corporation, with offices in Alexandria.

Since her mother was in the house when the girl disappeared, Alexandria police are convinced she left of her own volition. The parents, who could advance no reason for their daughter's departure, yesterday asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation to help find her. The bureau refused to say whether an agent had been assigned to the case.

Dressed in Slacks.

When her mother last saw her the girl was dressed in slacks, sport shirt and tennis shoes. She took no other clothing or belongings with her, a search of her room disclosed.

There had been no trouble of any kind, Mrs. Burke said yesterday afternoon. Describing her daughter as "inclined to tomboyishness," the mother said:

"She had a very happy day Saturday. At 9 o'clock in the morning I went with her to the station to see a schoolmate, who'd been visiting her from Richmond, off on the train. We came back home and later we had a long talk together, for about an hour and a half, I guess, but everything was amicable."

Call Is Unanswered.

Mrs. Burke missed her daughter when she called her to come to dinner. When there was no answer she remembered she had last seen her about 4:30 as the girl went up the stairs to her own room.

The Burke girl was named for her grandfather, the late Rev. Landon Randolph Mason, widely known Richmond clergyman. Attractive and vivacious, she was described as being about 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighing 116 pounds. She has short and very curly dark brown hair, brown eyes, a cleft chin and a dimple in each cheek.

Five Arabs Slain by British Troops

Cairo, Egypt, June 7 (AP).—Five Arabs and several British soldiers were reported killed in an hour's battle today on the Jerusalem-Tel Aviv road between 50 Arabs and a detachment of troops.

The troops machine-gunned the Arabs in an attempt to dislodge them from wartime Turkish trenches, the reports said, and the Arabs replied with rifle fire.

(The Palcor Agency said the engagement, the heaviest since the current disorders started April 19, still was going on. Troops, aided by police, tried unsuccessfully all afternoon to oust the Arabs from the trenches, the agency reported.)

The sixth battalion of British troops sent from Egypt since the outbreak of Jewish-Arab disorders in mid-April arrived in Jerusalem today.

The Arab general strike appeared deadlocked when strike leaders flatly turned down the latest attempt at mediation, made by Amir Abdullah, of Trans-Jordan.

Reynolds Says Confederacy's Spirit Lives On

Two Remaining Southern Veterans of District at Memorial Rites.

A Southern Senator, standing with bared head in a drizzling rain at Arlington Cemetery yesterday afternoon, told a handful of people who had come to honor the Confederate dead that the proud, gray line of the Southern Confederacy has dwindled and almost died, but that its spirit goes marching on through the years.

Only a few hundred people sat on the brink of the great ampitheater while Robert R. Reynolds, junior Senator from North Carolina, eulogized the Confederate dead. The hollow bowl of the amphitheater was bare and the empty concrete seats echoed the music and the speeches with a hollow sound.

Sons and daughters of the men who fought for the South were there to pay tribute to those of the army which once extended in giant columns from the Potomac, in the East, to the Rio Grande, in the West, when the country was two armed camps.

But the men who fought for Lee and Jackson were absent. Only two were there—old men who remember that day at Appomattox, when Robert E. Lee offered his sword to U. S. Grant. They are the only two in the District.

"The ranks of the Confederacy have been thinned by the Grim Reaper," Senator Reynolds said.

"Now there remain only a few thousand." He turned his eyes to the two veterans who sat beside him on the speakers platform.

". . . But their memory will live on through the years and will forever be cherished. Their sacrifice was not in vain."

Overcast.

Clouds gathered early in the afternoon veen before the ceremonies began. The clouds had covered the sun when Dr. Angie Smith, pastor of the Mt. Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church, gave the invocation. The sky was dark when the U. S. Navy Band played the Star Spangled Banner and colors were presented. It sprinkled a few drops when allegiance was pledged to the Stars and Stripeh and it drizzled a bit when the Confederate flag was saluted.

But as Senator Reynolds spoke the rain spattered loudly on the awning above the speakers stand. The wind blew, the flags whipped in the breeze so hard they were furled. The little crowd gathered under the roof that covers the fringe of the ampitheater. But in thewhole vast theater there were but three flags of the Confederacy.

One was large and of silk. That was the one the crowd saluted.

Flag From Uniform.

A little boy in a Confederate uniform his mother made from the uniform his grandfather wore waved another in his hand. It was a little flag. Another child held the third.

And in the theater there were but two Confederate uniforms. One was the suit the little boy wore. Another was worn by a Confederate veteran.

Gen. Albert Cox, formerly of North Carolina also, introduced Senator Reynolds. The United States Navy Band played "Dixie" and several hymns.

Dr. John E. Briggs, Fifth Baptist Church pastor, pronounced the benediction.

Flowers were strewn at the Confederate Monument after ceremonies in the ampitheater were over.

Mullen Opposes D. C. Democrat Rally Delegates

Attorney Wires Protest on Seating; Unquaified, He Declares.

John P. Mullen, Washington attorney, who wrote the proposed primary bill for the District, last night sent a lengthy protest to the credentials committees of the Democratic National Convention against the District convention delegates who, he said, had been "named at a recent alleged primary sponsored by the Democratic Party."

His protest read:

"I, John P. Mullen, author of the primary bill * * * do hereby protest against the seating of the nonresident office holders and otherwise unqualified persons named at a recent alleged primary under the advertised auspices of the said Democratic Party in the said district."

He listed five reasons why the delegates should not be seated at thec onvention. He charged the delegates were not bona fide residents of the District and that the election was conducted "contrary to all precedent, law and rights of the people."

He said he hau learned that each of the 17 delegates elected had to deposit $200. He said that sum was "unreasonable and contrary to the requirements of any legalized primary."

"These delegates," he charged, "cannot symbolize the sentiment of the democracy of the District of Columbia.

"I therefore urge the committee refuse to accept the alleged credentials about to be presented to it by all of the 17 persons now alleging themselves to be the duly elected delegates to your convention from the Distict of Columbia," his protest concluded.

Lucas May Drop Fight On Snell as Chairman

Cleveland, June 7 (AP).—Likelihood of a fight over Representative Snell, of New York as permanent chairman of the Republican convention diminished tonight. Robert Lucas, former director at Republican National Committee headquarters in Washington, who opened the fight against Snell, indicated he was undetermined whether to press the issue.

16 Flee Asylum Criminal Ward; Two Captured

Devol, Karpis Gangster, Is Leader in Minnesota Desperado Break.

St. Peter, Minn., June 7.—Sixteen inmates of the St. Peter State Hospital for the insane overpowered their guards tonight and escaped. They were led by Lawrence Devol, convicted bank robber, and former Karpis-Barker gangster, recently transferred here.

Cowing the guards the men rushed through the gates and fled into the St. Peter business district shortly after 7 p. m. (Central standard time). All the fugitives were inmates of the criminally insane ward.

Officials declined to discuss the break. Sheriff of surrounding counties and Twin Cities authorities were notified. All roads were guarded. Some time later two of the escaped men were recaptured.

The two were taken near Kasota. The other 14 were believed to be roaming the Minnesota River bottom, attempting to reach Mankato.

The mob stole at least one automobile and was believed to be seeking others to hasten the getaway.

Devol was transferred recently from Stillwater State Penitentiary, where he was serving a life term for participation in the 1932 robbery of the Third Northwestern National Bank in Minneapolis, in which two policemen were killed.

Devol was brought here from Stillwater after he had become violent, Warden J. S. Sullivan, of the State Penitentiary, said. Devol was morose and refused to work. Penitentiary officers said they feared he might harm some one there.

Word of the escape was broadcast by the State crime bureau radio station at Redwood Falls.

Race for President Is Close in Panama

Panama City, Panama, June 7 (AP). Early returns in Panama's presidential election indicated tonight Dr. Juan Demostenes Arosemena, candidate of the National Revolutionary Coalition Party, and Domingo Diaz, nominee of the Doctrinary Liberal Party, were running a close race.

Dr. Belisario Porras, Union Liberal, appeared to be third. Fourth was the Socialist, Higinio Arauz.

7 Die, 18 Are Hurt As Hotel Is Burned

San Francisco, June 7 (AP).—Seven persons died and eighteen were injured today in a fire which swept rapidly through a four-story frame hotel in the south-of-Market-street rooming house district.

The Rev. F. C. Clark, 56, of Cheyenne, Wyo., a delegate to the Seventh Day Adventist International Convention in session here, died in the smoke and flames but his bride of two months was rescued. She suffered serious burns.

Mrs. Clara Rolland, 60, a seamstress, suffocated in her room.

The other five dead were not immediately identified. Authorities said some of them were so badly burned that identification would be difficult.

The little hotel stood in the district bordering on the industrial area. Firemen halted the blaze after a two-hour battle, leaving the charred walls of the hotel standing.

Three firemen were among the injured. The others were listed as residents of San Francisco.

Authorities said the blaze apparently started in the hall on the ground floor, possibly from a burning cigarette. C. K. Fisher, the proprietor, speculated that incendiarism might have figured.

Capt. Carter Given Schwarzkopf Post

Trenton, N. J., June 7 (AP).—Capt. William J. Carter, of the Hammonton Station, tonight was named acting superintendent of the State police by Gov. Harold G. Hoffman. He succeeds Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, whose term expires at midnight.

The surprise appointment was announced over the State police teletype. Maj. Charles H. Schoeffel, Schwarzkopf's deputy, had been expected to step into the vacancy left by the State Senate's failure to confirm the Governor's appointment of Col. Mark O. Kimberling as police superintendent.

Refused reappointment by Gov. Hoffman, who charged that he had "bungled" the investigation of the Lindbergh-Hauptmann case, Schwarzkopf and many of his coworkers met at headquarters for a final get-together, during which the superintendent issued a statement of appreciation to officials, press and citizenry.

Eaker Flies 'Blind' In 2,600-Mile Trip

Los Angeles, June 7 (AP).—Maj. Ira C. Eaker, of the Army Air Corps, set his single-seated Army pursuit plane down here today after a "blind" flight across the country.

Escorted by Maj. William E. Kepner, also from the Montgomery (Ala.) base, in a similar Boeing P-12 ship, Maj. Eaker completed a test flight that began unannounced at New York last Wednesday noon.

By easy stages, owing to the limited gasoline supply in the small ships, the two officers flew the 2,600 miles of airway, Maj. Eaker in a hooded cabin relying solely on instruments, Maj. Kepner serving as convoy to avert mishaps.

The flight demonstrated, according to Maj. Eaker, the reliability of the instruments, and the fact that Army pilots can fly blind for long periods without too great fatigue.

"There were several times when the escort plane was forced to stay behind the 'blind' ship, because of poor visibility, and let the 'blind' ship lead the way," the officer said.

Nats Lose to Detroit, 10-8, as Rally in 9th Fails With Tying Run On

Tigers Pound Pair of Griff Hurlers

10,000 Watch Game; Newsom, Weaver Hit; 3 Errors Hurt.

Kuhel's Bunt Fails in 9th; Double Play Ends Contest.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

To the accompanying moans of 10,000 fans who saw 'em fizzle in the midst of what had been a gallant rally in the ninth inning, the Nats yesterday lost a ball game to the Tigers.

Too late the Nats attempted to reclaim a game that they had tossed away in the early innings, and their ninth-inning gestures served only to raise a series of false hopes among the 10,000, imperil the Tigers' train connections and reduce Detroit's ultimate margin to 10 to 8.

The move toward the exits was suddenly halted in that ninth when, trailing, 10-5, the Nats, without warning, began to reform. Jesse Hill, pinch-hitting for Ed Linke, drew a walk; Carl Reynolds slammed a triple to deep centerfield, and Ossie Bluege walked.

In a trice, or almost a trice, the Nats had the tying run on base, with none out. Johnny Stone larruped a single to right that scored the seond of the required five runs and Ceil Travis rapped a single to center that scored Bluege. Thus Travis, on first, represented the tying run.

Kuhel's Bunt Fails.

Hot on the scent of a thrilling climax, the 10,000 entreated Joe Kuhel to do something about the situation as the Tigers hurriedly rushed Roxie Lawson into the box to relieve Joe Sullivan. Manager Harris' strategy called for a sacrifice bunt that would move the tying run to second base and then it was that gloom thick enough to defy a tank corps descended on the scene.

Kuhel's attempt to bunt was a weak foul pop to Catcher Reiber and the groans of the 10,000 were audible downtown. There was yet hope as Red Kress strode to the batter's box, but not for long. Kress pounded the ball to Rogell, who rifled it to Gehringer, who rifled it to Burns, and the Tigers' triumph was sealed by a double play.

Some very inexpert pitching by Buck Newsom and Monte Weaver had presented the Tigers with the ball game in the early innings when Detroit amassed a 6-0 lead. Newsom had great difficulty in getting 'em out in the first inning when he yielded three runs under the persuasion of Gehringer's triple and Burns' double and he couldn't get anybody out in the third.

The first man out in the third inning was, in fact, Newsom. After Fox singled to right and Gehringer doubled to left to score him, Manager Harris deduced that Newsom was not effective and called Monte Weaver into the box as Bashful Buck quit the scene in high dudgeon.

Before the inning was over, the Tigers collected two more runs with the aid of a pair of wild throws by Kress and Bolton, and a single by Owen.

In the fourth the Nats began to

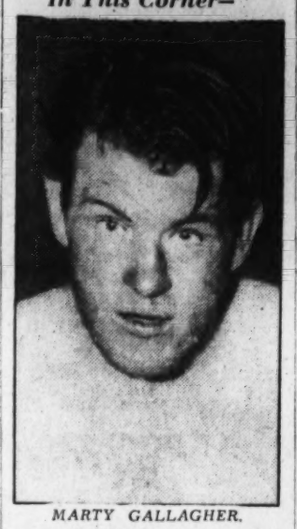
Gallagher and Tow to Settle Feud At Stadium Tonight in 3d Match

In This Corner—



MARTY GALLAGHER.

By Bill McCormick.

A local feud that has become almost as ancient and bitter as was West Virginia's Hatfield-McCoy animosity will be publicly settled at Griffith Stadium tonight when Marty Gallagher and Bob Tow go asniping at each other for 15 rounds—or until one or the other bites the dust.

Local rivalry between supporters of the big bruiser from Daown in Foggy Bottom and Tow, of the Alexandria Tows, suh, has aroused so much interest in the engagement that a crowd of more than 5,000 is expected to cluster around the battlefield to watch the gunning.

Gallagher favors the out-in-the-open style of sharpshooting, exposing his own person with reckless abandon for the privilege of taking one pot shot at the enemy. Tow is an undercover fighter—a true lurker—who prefers to ambush himself behind a barricade of gloves, elbows and whatnot to snipe at the enemy from a point of safety.

Betting odds have shifted from one feudist to the other during the rather hectic wagering which has been going on for the past week. First large delegations from Alexandria reported they were being forced to risk as many as seven to get five potatoes on the Alexandria Adonis. Then would come reports that Gallagher was on the short end of 5 to 8 gambling. Prevailing odds have the boys even-Stephen—and the gamblers don't care if you don't bet on the fight, its that close.

Tow Punctured the Spare.

The encounter will be a rubber match. Several years ago, before the legalization of larrup in the District, Tow, then a mere youngster in his teens, popped into the scene at the old Mid-City Arena in Laurel as a substitute opponent for Gallagher, a very fair-haired boy, indeed, at the moment.

Gallagher, who is prone to fleshiness because of an almost uncontrollable appetite for sweets, entered the ring with many pounds of excess suet draped about his midsection. Tow, then a lean, hungry kid, wasted no time in planting a dynamite punch in the midsection, almost puncturing the spare tire which encircled Marty—and dropping the big Irishman for a nine count. Marty dusted himself off and managed to last the distance, but he was badly beaten.

A return bout was arranged for old Portner's Arena in Alexandria. This time it was Tow who took Gallagher lightly—and he was quickly knocked flatter than a radio comedian's joke by a terrific right hand to the head.

Came many ups and downs for both boys. Gallagher, after being soundly spanked by Tony Galento, scored a knockout over the rolypoly New Jersey puss-puncher in a return bout. Then Marty went on to bigger and better things, whipping Ray Impellettiere unmercifully and climaxing his comeback with a decision over King Levinsky. That was Gallagher's last fight to date.

Both in Condition.

Tow, after beating Galento here, dropped a decision to Tony in New Jersey. He was sent to the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore for repairs to an injured arm and after the scars of the operation had healed, he started his comeback campaign in Chicago.

Under the skillful guidance of one Billy Stevens, Tow pounded out an even half-dozen good wins in rings of the Windy City, then dropped down to South Carolina to knock out Salvatore Rugirello, after the South American had dropped him for a nine count in the first round.

Thus it is that tonight's fight finds both local lads at the peak of their careers and the fires of their feud burning more brightly than it has any time in the past. Strangely enough, tonight's battle also will find both contestants in the very best working order—trained to absolute perfection.

Tow was forced to guard against staleness from almost the first day he donned training gloves for the engagement. He successfully circumvented the peril and is on edge at about 200 pounds. Gallagher, who has entered the ring slow and ponderous at 212 or 215 pounds, is expected to tip the beam at 205 or 206 pounds—a tonnage that means good condition for him.

Three six-rounders and a brace of fours will comprise the supporting card.

Bouts are rated from A (goody, goody for you) to G (phooey, phooey for youse).

Main Event—Marty Gallagher, Washington, vs. Bob Tow, Alexandria, heavyweights; 15 rounds. Rated B. A very good rating for a heavyweight bout and the contest may earn a higher rating before it has become history. There is so little love lost between these two that the encounter might well be classed as a genuine "grudge fight." If anyone would believe it. Each with a win to his credit feels confident of winning the rubber by a knockout. Tow may have improved as a puncher, even as a boxer, but Gallagher has the courage and dogged determination that carries fighters to great heights. We like Marty by a knockout.

Semifinal—Carr Wright, Washington, vs. Lou Raymond, Baltimore, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated D. Raymond is a smart boxer, but Wright should prove too rugged for him.

Preliminaries—Stanford Carrier, Washington, vs. Al Parks, Baltimore, welterweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. Parks has a wallop like a Zironcheck Zipper, and he also has the edge in experience. He should beat Carrier.

Joe Green, Washington, vs. Al Sharp, Baltimore, featherweights; 6 rounds. Rated C. No one knows whether Green has slipped during his long layoff, but we don't think he has and like him to beat Sharp.

Killer Lamar, Washington, vs. Battling Mimms, Washington, colored heavyweights; 4 rounds. Rated D. Lamar by knockout.

George Cox, Washington, vs. Mickey Finn, Washington, light heavyweights; 4 rounds. Rated D. Cox.

Chisox Break Boston Jinx, 13 to 5

Kreevich's Homer With Bases Full Brings 13-to-5 Triumph.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 7.—Mike Kreevich's home run with the bases full in the sixth broke up the game with the Red Sox today before 26,500 and gave the White Sox their first victory in nine starts this season against Boston, 13 to 5.

The defeat, snapping Boston's winning streak at five, again dropped the Fenway flock two and a half games back of the league-leading Yankees, who won a 16-inning game from Cleveland.

Kreevich's blow, made with the score tied at 5-5, was his fourth home run of the season. Three of them have been made against the Red Sox. He also doubled and singled, and batted in a total of five runs.

Yanks Down Indians, 5-4, In 16th

Ruffing Goes Route, Gives 10 Hits; Homers; Hildebrand Loser.

Selkirk's Homer in 16th Wins Games; Yankee Hurler Hits One.

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 7.—Charley Ruffing and George Selkirk combined today to nose out the Cleveland Indians, 5 to 4, in a long-distance, 16-inning struggle, and stretch the Yankees' American League lead to two and a half games.

Ruffing, pitching 10-hit ball in going the route for the victors, hit a homer with one on in the third to give the Yanks an early lead, which Cleveland wiped out with a three-run splurge in the fourth.

Selkirk stepped up to the plate with two out in the sixteenth and smashed out a homer to break up the ball game.

Oral Hildebrand hurled the full game for the Indians, and except for the third, and the seventh, when two more Yankee runs came in on four straight singles, held the Yankee bats in check.

The victory gave the Yanks the current series two games to one, and, as Boston was defeated by the Chicago White Sox, pulled the New York league lead out of immediate danger.

Cleveland Here For Three Games

The Cleveland Indians moved into Washington from New York last night to open a three-game series with the Nats today.

Manager Bucky Harris will give Pete Appleton his first starting assignment in three weeks in the series opener. Appleton, who has been performing in relief roles, will probably be opposed by Johnny Allen, who is recovering from a $250 fine levied by Manager Steve O'Neill after Allen, in a rage at losing a game, wrecked the furniture of a Boston hotel lobby.

Buddy Lewis suffered a torn finger nail on his left hand in attempting to catch a throw by Bolton in the third inning yesterday and will be out of the Nats' line-up for at least two days. Cecil Travis will be shifted to third base.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

This Marty Gallagher, the Perennial Pride of Foggy Bottom, who meets up with Bob Tow in the Griffith Stadium ring, may be no champion but he's still in a class by himself in the prize ring industry. The big Irishman fights only when he needs the money and times haven't been very slack in his saddle horse business in late years.

For the past three years, Marty has been retiring after each fight. His log of engagements reads like the chronicling of Arctic nights, spaced six months apart. He's fought exactly six times since the night three years ago when he knocked out this same Tow in four rounds at Portner's Arena.

POVICH.

There are week-end golfers, 17-year locusts, and now Marty apparently is aiming to establish himself as a semiannual fighter. He's come out of apparent retirement so often that each of his fights is now described as a comeback. At the present writing, he has to his credit one fewer comebacks than our fine-feathered friends, the starlings.

But Washington fans go for Marty. Any time they put the big Irishman in the ring—against anybody—the gate receipts rocket. They like him for his big, honest pan, his village smithy biceps, his eternal plodding and his ignorance of the word quit. And they always come back in the hope that sometime Marty will get really mad at somebody and belt him out of there.

That's been Marty's trouble. He ain't aimin' to do no harm to anybody. He's the first to break clean, to let up after spinning his foe into a hittable position with his great strength. He doesn't have that killer instinct that's supposed to be a prime asset in the prize ring. He's a good, big boy, kind to his mother, gifted with a superb physique and able to take care of himself in the ring.

But some day Washington fans are hoping that Marty will go berserk, or something, and use those ham-like fists with the strength nature gave him, backed by a wild desire to get it over with. They're satisfied that he can take it in order to give it. Only twice has he been stopped in ten years of fighting some of the game's toughest.

Tonight might be the night when Marty will get really mad. Tow, with his success in the Chicago tournament, is displacing Marty as the city's No. 1 heavyweight and Tow's handlers have missed no chance to describe Marty as a palooka, a has-been and a general no-account heavyweight. And Marty's sore.

But if it's the same old Marty, his kindliness in the ring will probably repossess him this evening. He'll give Tow all the best of the breaks; he'll desist from punching when punching would do him the most good, and he won't slip in a nasty punch for all the world. He'll lean backward to fight clean, even if he has to take a beating.

Marty never was cut out for a champion. You don't find champions with those big legs or slow reflexes. And they have more snap to their punches. Marty's strictly a clubber, but with that eternal plodding, that absolute refusal to quit under any circumstances, and that chance that he may bang over that powerhouse right hand, he's a pretty good fighter.

His last bout was the final match of the 1935 summer season at Griffith Stadium. The average fighter would get rusty between engagements spaced like that, but Marty's funny that way. When the gong rings, he's the same old Marty, little better, no worse. He never was a sharpshooter, you see, and he never laid much store by timing his punches.

In Short—

It was a profitable tournament that the United States Golf Association conducted in the National Open . . . gate receipts ran to $53,000 for the three days . . . and the prize money to the winning pros totaled only $5,000 . . . if an amateur had finished in the money, he would have been given the equivalent in silver plate . . . the value of the Open championship to the pros has steadily declined . . . it was worth $100,000 to Walter Hagen and Gene Sarazen in exhibition matches, indorsements and other honorariums . . . but less colorful fellows like Billy Burke, Sam Parks and Tony Manero are lucky to make it net 'em 10 grand . . . the Kenwood Club turned down Tony Manero's bid for the professional post two years ago . . . Lawson Little's contract to popularize the Spalding clubs received an awful jolt when he failed to qualify in the Open . . . it may not be renewed unless he re-establishes himself as a big-shot golfer . . . Baltusrol was a sporty course according to that Pittsburgh pro who took a 9 on the first hole and then quit the tournament.

Manero, National Open Winner, Proves One of Golf's Surprises

Open Victor's Play Is Held Uncanny

Carolinian Should Make About $25,000 on His Crown.

By Dave Herman.
A Staff Correspondent.

Baltusrol Golf Club, Springfield, N. J., June 7.—Anything can happen in golf. Tony Manero, the slim, 31-year-old Greensboro, N. C., professional who yesterday won the National Open championship with a record-breaking 282, proved that.

Thursday Manero was just one of 164 golfers, a 50 to 1 shot, answering the roll call. Today he is the talk of the golfing world.

He is $1,000 richer, and wears the crown that has rested on the brows of William Anderson, winner at Baltusrol 33 years ago; Walter Hagen, Gene Sarazen and Bobby Jones.

Colorful, a fine shotmaker of calm temperament, Manero probably will make quite a bit of money as champion, whereas last year Sam Parks, who ingloriously lost his title in the mad scramble Friday, cashed in only an estimated $300 following his unexpected victory at Oakmont. At least $25,000 should be Tony's for the next 12 months.

Outlasting perhaps the greatest field in Open history, Manero shot golf that one would expect from a Hagen or Sarazen.

Manero's 73—69—73—67 not only broke the Open record of 286 set by Chick Evans in 1916 and matched by Sarazen 16 years later, but clipped a shot off the British Open record of which Sarazen and Henry Cotton, the Englishman, are the joint holders, it was learned today.

After it was all over the fast-walking, extremely high-strung Mr. Cooper declared, "it was just one of those things where a fellow is helpless."

Sarazen Aid to Victor.

Manero's approaching and putting were uncanny. Chick Evans, playing right behind him, said he never saw anything like it. Sarazen said, "Tony's stolen my Italian thunder."

There never has been a more thrilling Open than this one, and the gallery was greater than any one which followed Bob Jones when he was king of the day.

The manner in which the pros and amateurs attacked par struck a popular note with fans. On the last day, when the pressure was greatest and golf scores were soaring, par was broken no less than 11 times, and tied that many.

Lucky for Manero—he had an experienced warrior to bring him home—Gene Sarazen. Twenty years ago they caddied at Elmsford and Westchester, and it delighted Gene's heart to see one of his boyhood caddy chums climb the ladder of success.

Certainly Sarazen's steadying influence—his 4-3-2-3-3, "five birdies" start, something seldom seen in an Open, gave Tony the necessary stimulus to go about busting pars and records.

Sarazen's soothing remarks, "Nice going, Toney; you got it, Tony; careful, Tony," were sweet music to the Italian sensation. Gene was like a godfather.

Manero's victory is proof one needs a good man to play with. Two years ago Lawson Little was with Olin Dutra when the "ill man" from California triumphed. Mac Smith brought home Sam Parks last year.

And Mac Smith played the golf of a lifetime. So did Wiffy Cox, Washington pro, who was only one over for 72 holes.

The collapse of Vic Ghezzi was the big surprise. His 81 just goes to show you that not all the youngsters can take it, big and as seasoned and as good as they are rated to be.

Fletcher Named Va. Freshman Coach

University, Va., June 7.—Dick Fletcher, for eight years coach of football, basketball and baseball in the Maury High School, of Norfolk, has been appointed head coach of freshman athletics for the University of Virginia, it was announced tonight by Norton G. Pritchett, director of athletics.

At Maury High Coach Fletcher has made a remarkable record as a coach. In football his teams have won 44 games, tied 12 and lost 17, have been three times State high school champions, three times runners-up, and once third. Twice they have been undefeated, in 1929 and again last fall when his third State title was won.

Under his coaching Maury basketball teams have won 96 contests and lost 37, and in baseball they have been 37 times winners and 19 times defeated. He has also supervised successful track, tennis and golf teams.

He organized at Norfolk the only high school sailing regatta along the Atlantic Coast, and when baseball ceased to be recognized by the Virginia High School Literary and Athletic League he organized a circuit in the Tidewater. His nine won this championship during the spring just ending, and laid claim to the State title.

Fletcher is a native of State College, Pa., where his father is a noted horticulturist. He went to the University of Chattanooga on an Adolph Ochs scholarship, where he specialized in English and journalism, and was a sports writer for Chattanooga papers. He taught English at Maury.

Hallock Equals Course Mark At Kenwood; Other Golf Notes

Bernie Hallock, winner of this year's Kenwood Invitation tournament, equalled the noncompetitive amateur course record at Kenwood yesterday with a 68—two under par.

Hallock, playing with assistant pro, Al Jamison, L. E. Hill and H. J. Miller, recorded a par 34 for the first nine holes and a sub-par 34 coming in.

An eagle 2 on the par-4 fifteenth was accomplished when Hallock sank a chip shot from 20 feet off the green.

Hallock's card:

Par	4	4	4	4	4	3	4	3	4—34
Hallock	5	5	3	3	3	4	4	3	4—34
Par	3	4	5	5	4	4	4	3	4—36
Hallock	3	4	4	5	5	2	3	3	5—35

Tommy Webb, jr., had the hottest of the four hot hands recorded at the Washington Golf and Country Club Saturday afternoon. Playing with his father, Dr. Thomas Webb, C. Grover and Jimmy Corcoran, Tommy, jr., navigated the par 70 course in exactly 69 strokes.

Corcoran shot a 70; Dr. Webb, a 73, and Grover, a 74.

That rarest of golfing feats—a double hole in one—was narrowly missed on Bannockburn's No. 11 yesterday. Langdon Winslow pushed one straight into the cup, 170 yards away. Next on the tee was Alvere Sike. His drive stopped just 12 inches from the hole. Playing with them were George Winslow and W. Oberlund.

Bannockburn's blind bogey tournament was won by W. T. Matthews who shot a 49-47, minus 27 handicap for a net 69. Second was G. E. Getty with 50-42 minus 18—74, while N. A. Gallau and Fred Burroughs were tied for third with 80s. Getty carried an 18 handicap and Burroughs a 26.

Billy Houghton, brother to Al Houghton, well known pro, shot a par-breaking 34 on the outgoing nine at the same course yesterday, despite a 3-putt 5 on the third hole. Houghton did not play the second nine.

Favorites survived their initial test yesterday at Manor as the annual two-man tournament swung into action. In the feature match of the day Harry Pitt and J. W. Pitt were extended to the limit to defeat J. W. Peters and H. A. Neff, 2 to 1.

Dave Thompson and Tommy Bones received unexspected competition from W. G. McCrary and Emerson Moore while Bobby Brownell and Hickman Green were easy victors over A. M. Bourt and E. H. Cashell.

Summaries of first round matches follow:

E. F. Wesley and Matt Clayton defeated W. S. Cruise and H. J. Cooper, 2 and 1; J. C. Rudder and J. V. Price defeated Matt Myers and R. R. Springs, 2 and 1; C. A. Albert and R. A. Pilsen defeated Jack Whittlesey and John Ruppert, 4 and 3; J. W. Harvey and Harry Pitt defeated J. W. Peters and H. A. Neff, 2 and 1.

J. R. Patterson and J. S. Evart defeated H. Nopewood and W. Crizer, 5 and 4; Tom Carney and L. L. Stratton defeated Fred Walen and Chester Leakin, 2 and 1; B. E. Gamble nad J. Medley defeated L. L. Middleton and I. Wiffen, 2 and 1.

Bobby Brownell and Hickman Green defeated A. M. Bourt and E. H. Cashell, 6 and 4; W. L. Jones and E. T. Neff defeated O. L. Waite and J. J. Buckley, 1 up; D. Thompson and Tommy Bones defeated W. G. McGrary and Emerson Moore, 2 and 1; Tom Corvin and Walter Talbert defeated J. A. Lompart and J. Stadler, 3 and 2.

Harry Pitt, former Middle Atlantic golf champion, came within two strokes of tying the Manor course yesterday with a par-shattering round of 66. The big blond star had only one 5 on each nine—the ninth and fifteenth—and shot a pair of 33s.

His card follows:

Out	4	3	3	3	4	4	4	3	5—33
In	3	3	4	4	4	5	3	3	4—33

Mrs. H. J. Simons and Mrs. H. B. Stone each finished with a 40 set to tie for first place in the women's blind bogey tournament yesterday at Manor. A deadlock also existed for second honors, Mrs. J. P. McMahon and Mrs. A. M. Voigt tallying a net score of 38.

Lou Harrison, Argyle Club champion, shot a 69—three under par—yesterday to win the Argyle blind bogey tournament. He was playing with F. Olmstead, who shot a par 72.

Louis

Camp Scene. Joe Looks Good To Old-Timers.

By Jack Miley.

Lakewood, N. J., June 7.—Joe Louis' fight camp today looked like Lenox avenue on a busy Saturday night. There were four thousand people to watch Louis lambast his sparring partners. Thirty-four hundred of them were Senegambians from Harlem. There were a few Nordics present, including Philadelphia Jack O'Brien and your correspondent. I am giving you a report of the show through Philadelphia Jack's eyes. The old geezer, who fought Stanley Ketchel, Jack Blackburn, Bob Fitzsimmons and a couple of other guys named Elmer, looks at the world through tortoise shell glasses and admits his glimmers are none too good.

"If there is a better fighter than Joe Louis," said Quakertown Johnnie, "I have yet to see him. Jack Johnson, he was a heel compared to this boy. Jack would have lasted a few rounds because he was an uncanny defensive fighter. He could nick off a million gloves with that long left hand. He could sit you down with that right, especially the uppercut. He pivoted beautifully with his right; he seemed to get the center of balance with it. But he wouldn't hit Louis with that blow in a 'coon's age."

Joe was sharper than a bowie knife today. He lacerated and numbed his sparring partners at will. There have been some extremely gloomy reports emanating from his camp. Joe had housemaid's knee, leaping dandruff and hurry-up halitosis, according to the diagnosticians. If this were true, he has had his symptoms because this afternoon he looked like a bank draft from the old homestead.

Broadway John Doyle, the old bookie who has been in the dough ever since he laid 6 to 5 and take your choice on the Civil War, is afraid another favorite will romp in.

"I am closing my book on a ton of coal," said Jack. "The boy has too many marbles to make it a good hoss race. What can you say after you've said you're sorry?"

The chitlin and fresh pork clientele had a field day. The brunette customers cheerfully surrendered their dollar ten per head and there must have been at last $3,000 in the hamper before Louis went to the post. This does not include the take from the concessions which did a terrific business. They had a circus tent pitched alongside the open-air arena. A hurdy-gurdy played Duke Elington's tunes and the brew was flowing freely. The bon ton, the elite, the dernier cri of Fog Hollow promenaded and the octaroon aristocracy was out in full force. There is one thing you can say for Louis' camp, it may not be good but it is sure as hell stylish.

After he had cuffed a lot of nonentities around for eight heats, Joe pulled up without getting out of breath. "Will you lick Schmeling?" I asked.

The tan tornado tugged a glove off his hand and snickered, "Yeah man. Him and who else?"

We ran down the report that Joe was about to become a papa. Joe grinned and said, "I'm sorry but it ain't time yet." The likeable Louis then explained "Johnny Roxborough, my manager, told us to lay off having children. Johnny said we shouldn't be bothered with babies at this stage of the game. Later maybe, Johnny says it will be o. k., so I am taking his word for it. He never steered me wrong before."

Joe is obviously pulling his punches with his sparring partners—something he never did before.

"I've only got a few of them left," said the Detroit miracle man. "So why should I waste them? What do these people want for half a dollar—a homicide? After all I am fighting Max Schmeling for $40 tops."

Joe gnawed a chicken wing in his little tin dressing room after his workout and said, "boy, I am hunghy—when do we eat?"

Among others present who saw Louis go through his pace were Abe Attell and Willie Lewis. Attell denied he was carrying that little black bag.

"I am strictly here as an observer," said the knave of the Black Sox scandal. Strangely enough, Attell, who was one of the all-American featherweights himself, did not fancy Louis so much as a puncher as a boxer.

"He is just about the last word in that stuff, "remarked Attell.

Willie Lewis, who fought Ketchel, took issue with him. "The guy is a million-dollar slugger," said Mickey Walker's aide-de-camp.

Michael himself who ran over from Rumson to watch this mitt mardi gras, gauged him as a grand combination of both. "He will do anything you make him do," opined Michael. "If you want to box him he will box your ears off; if you want to punch, he will step up there and lay that leather in with you."

Down But Not Out—In Play At First Base

With a rare burst of speed and a rolling slide, Johnny Stone beat out an infield hit in the fourth inning yesterday. Pitcher Al Crowder is seen crossing the base after taking First Baseman Burns' throw, but Stone arrived there first.

whittle away at Crowder's 6-0 lead, picking up a run on three singles by the middle of the batting order and they added another in the fifth after Pinch Hitter Miles, batting for Weaver, singled to center and scored on the first of Carl Reynolds' three straight hits.

But Weaver had given two runs right back to the Tigers in the fifth which Goslin opened by slamming a home run over the rightfield wall, so the Nats found themselves trailing, 8-2, when the seventh arrived.

Before it was over, they batted Crowder out of the box and scored three runs. Miles and Linke walked, Reynolds doubled and Bluege singled, but the left-handed Joe Sullivan put an instant stop to the uprising with none as yet out.

Two apparently unimportant runs which later in the game assumed great importance were scored by the Tigers in the eighth off Linke on a single by Rogell, a walk to Gehringer, Cecil Travis' slow-thinking at third base, where he had relieved the slightly injured Buddy Lewis, and a single by Walker.

That made it 10-5 and, as I pointed out, those ninth-inning gestures of the Nats served only to raise enough false hopes to float the Commerce Building.

Montpelier Beats Harrisonburg, 2-1

Oranges' Home Opener Is Tight Hurling Duel.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orange, Va., June 7.—The Montpelier Oranges opened the home season here today, nipping Harrisonburg 2-1 in one of the best games ever witnessed in the Orange park. Until the eighth, it was a pitcher's duel between Smith and Andreoli, with Harrisonburg leading, 1-0.

Haney, first up for the Mocubs in this frame, singled, moving to second when Baker was passed. The runners advanced on a double steal. Haney scoring on an infield out, and Baker coming home on Ross' second hit of the day, a single through short.

The visitors scored their lone run in the fourth on F. Baker's triple and Ignasiak's single. Fielding honors went to L. Utz, of the Orange club, who made a sensational running catch of S. Huffman's terrific line drive.

Out Fishin' . . . . .

By Jack Hawley.

Since our exclusive announcement regarding the first arrival of blue fish on S. W. Middles yesterday (caught by Lem Orm, of this city), this writer has ceased to get in a real meal or a wink of sleep. Every blue fisherman has phoned, those anglers who have heard the stories of the fighting blue have called, and for once this writer has been glad to stay wide awake—checking thoroughly the authenticity of the first blue fish catch.

Anglers, it's on the level—the fish were caught on the Middles and Capt. Bob Drury gets the honor of making the first catch of the season. This writer has seen panic among fishermen, but never before has seen them go haywire in such volume; all want to know where they can procure chum, where did Mr. Orm get his chum? Do you believe the blues are here? Are they scattered? Do you think a stray school entered the bay in search of food? If they are here, why aren't they at Wachapreague? And so it goes.

Capt. Hazzard Has Chum.

The answer is very simple. Your correspondent has checked every place from Messick and Reedville, Va., north. We phoned our old reliable Capt. Noah Hazzard at Galesville and it took Noah to straighten out the tangle caused by the 24 blues caught yesterday. Noah sold the chum—he has plenty of it on sale every day after 9:30 a. m. at $1 per bushel, beginning tomorrow. His phone number is West River 201-F-11.

Yesterday was the first day he had sold any alewives. He declared, "Jack I have been throwing back into the water more than a ton per day because it would be useless to bring them ashore. The cost of ice to preserve them would be prohibitive, because it apparently is too early to market them to sport fishermen."

Galesville is but a short drive—pick up your chum and return to Marlboro, take the short cut to the Point Lookout road, at the edge of town (well marked) and you arrive at your destination about an hour later than you would over the direct route from Washington—it's worth it to get this particular kind of bait.

Croakers in Abundance.

For croaker fishing and the elusive trout—there is no gamble—both are here in abundance. The best suggestion we can offer is look at yesterday's "out Fishin' Guide" which indicates all the better fishing grounds south to Cape Charles. For croakers all one has to do is to hire a boat and with green shrimp (never buy frozen shrimp because fish know the difference—if you don't think so try it once), select any of the several marked fishing grounds, drop your line overboard and—leave it on the bottom—without moving it—don't raise it just because the other fellow does—hold it still and see the difference in your cateh.

For trout—forget shrimp as bait—use peeler crab and if using two hooks bait one with each kind of bait—both fish are waiting for a meal—perhaps you will land a real double—two of the same species of fish.

Without question this week-end, weather permitting, will be one of the most successful of the early season—everyone is going—don't delay your trip. Take along a camera and next winter show your friends the fish stories you like to tell about—but find it difficult to prove.

Your correspondent could give you reports of huge catches on many fishing grounds but it would require a great deal of space in order to do jujstice to all so—until another time—thousands of fish were caught yesterday and we promise—they were really caught—just like the authentic blue fish. It's funny what a blue fish can do to an angler—isn't it?

Welsh Repulses Garnett to Win Annual City Tennis Tourney

Victor Takes His 3d Net Crown

Score 6-3, 6-3, 0-6, 6-3 as Titlist Outstrokes Challenger.

By George Considine.

Stroking the ball with cool, consistent mastery, Barney Welsh, District and National Public Parks tennis champion, repulsed the spirited challenge of Yelverton Garnett, upset sensation, yesterday at the Edgemoor Club, to win the eighth annual City of Washington championship. The scores were 6—3, 6—3, 0—6, 6—3.

With the exception of the third set, Welsh was always right on top of his game, displaying such depth and power on occasion that Garnett was scarcely a factor. For the greater part of the battle the two hard-hitting netmen were content to remain in deep court and participate in scorching backhand duels.

The champion started off with a rush, taking the offensive at every opportunity. Using his backhand to great advantage, he went to 5—2. For the first time of the match Garnett's powerful delivery began to function and the game was his at deuce. Welsh easily dominated with his service to win out at 6—3 on a crisp cross-court placement.

Garnett Has Stage Fright.

Again in the second session Welsh ran up a substantial lead partially on Garnett's unsteadiness, but mostly on his own speed depth and control. Playing in his first major tournament finale, Garnett seemed to suffer from stage fright.

The tall, powerful lad, who had trounced such stars as McElvenny, Latona and Mitchell to reach the titular round, spotted his illustrious adversary three games in the second set and then fought for dear life. He held Welsh at even terms for the remainder of the second set only to bow at set-point on a heart-breaking double fault.

It was more than apparent throughout the third set, which Garnett won at love, that Welsh was saving himself for the sprint. The two-time District champion, seeing that Garnett's service was coming down with crushing power, simply loafed through the storm, never trying a lick to score.

Welsh Comes Back.

After the rest period, however, Welsh struck out with his accustomed vigor, time and again bringing the large gallery to its feet with stunning power and uncanny accuracy. That fourth set proved to be the most beautiful competitive set-to seen locally in several years.

Riding on the crest of his best game Welsh managed to keep in front by a slight margin. Garnett suffered immeasurably by double-faulting inthat all-important eighth game, allowing Barney to lead at 5-3 on his own service. Sensing victory, Welsh cut loose with driving fury, finally winning with a screaming backhand placement down the line.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Charles Town, June 6.

Dear Al:

Just because no stimulating or doping cases have been revealed here to date is no reason to believe that the officials here have let up in their attempts to eliminate those evils. There is a narcotic man at the track each day and the saliva specimens are sent to Washington for examination. Yesterday's best laugh was a wise-crack by George Cook, trainer of Runanstay, Coventry Queen and others. Cook came to the press box at our invitation to see Runanstay compete. The filly bounced to the front at once, set a terrific pace and had a two-length lead approaching the three-quarter pole. At this point, Runanstay failed to stay. She quit so suddenly she appeared to be dragging an anchor. After the race, with Runanstay last, I turned and asked Cook what happened to his horse. "You won't believe it," he replied, "but when she got to that three-quarter pole the pole suddenly reached out and cracked her right over the head." There are several horses here that raced in Cuba during the winter. Under the rules at this track their Cuban races are not considered, due to the fact that the oval is an "outlaw" one. However, officials announced yesterday that henceforth the Havana races will count in all penalties.

BILL.

First race—Timber Phantom will be operating in his own class in this field and I see no reason for mistakes. Palumbo is slated to ride. I'm still waiting for Thunderlee's real race. Midnight Show to take care of the others.

Second race—Dixie B. and Bromide should battle it out for this purse. Both are fit and ready and carry like weights. Scotty's Pride appears underfed, but could surprise in this company.

Third race—Miss Fern toyed with her opposition in the mud here. She should do almost as well on a fast track. The weight should not bother her. Cantide and Spear should take money positions.

Fourth race—Justa Flight has the top figure in this company. His last was a beaut. Aella can better her showing yesterday and will be the winner if the top one makes mistakes. Mintie for the show.

Fifth race—Silvery Cloud and Idle Worker seem the best suited of those to compete in this event. The first-named gets a 5-pound shift in the weights and deserves the call. Helen Bab is due respect. Flosilda may find the route too long.

Sixth race—Traplou, a winner over a somewhat similar field here, may carry the top weight of 115 pounds to victory. Nora's Grace and My Sis seem to be the ones to beat. A change in riders would help the last named.

Seventh race—Egeon is the class of this company. Last was a bang-up winning effort and I can't see the 119-pound assignment stopping him. Flageolet's last should be tossed out. Foggy Dawn should go well at the route.

Eighth race—In the substitute event, I'll take Wise Money, Hurdy Gurdy and Gee Sharp.

Best bet—Miss Fern.

1—Mabel Beyond, Timber Phantom, Motion.
2—Dixie B., Bromide, Clifton's Nell.
3—Ada Crux, Miss Fern, Dolly Tour.
4—Aella, Justa Flight, Mintie.
5—Wittekind, Flosilda, Idle Worker.
6—Most Always, My Sis, Miss Symphony.
7—Egeon, Foggy Dawn, Miss Catalan.
8—June G., Wise Money, Hurdy Gurdy.
Best bet—Egeon.

Celtics Defeat Chevy Chase Grays, 7-2

Printz Hurls for Victors; McCarthy Hits Eighth Homer of Season.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., June 7.—With Otey Printz, latest addition to the mound corps, on the firing line, the St. Mary's Celtics overcame the Chevy Chase Grays here today in a steady rain, 7 to 2. Charlie Swinner pitched well for the invaders, but the Celts had the punch necessary for victory.

"Bib" McCarthy, Celts' leading hitter, hit his eighth home run in the third with a man on base.

Printz, besides pitching a smart game, contributed three singles. Archie Benson and Art Ludlow, with two hits in four trips, were responsible for four runs. Red McMenniman and Woody Godfrey were the fielding stars.

The Celts will practice Monday, Wednesday and Saturday afternoons this week in preparation for Sunday's game with the Ballston A. C. on the latter team's diamond.

The Blue Flame Valets, city Sunday champions last year of The Post Sandlot Association, yesterday discovered themselves to be just one more good team in this year's mad scramble for the National City League "A" championship.

The Blue Flames took it on the nose from the lowly Woodmen of the World Elm Camp, by a 4-to-3 count, for their first defeat of the season. Their fall, however, had no more repercussions than the 17-4 defeat which the Heurich Brewers plastered on the Union Printers.

Shady Grove Barbecue profited by the Beer team's triumph, for it now finds itself in a tie for first place with the Printers, each having won four out of five games. The Barbecuers took the measure of the Dixie Pigs, 12 to 7.

It was the veteran Charlie Booker who beat the Blue Flames. The Valets were able to solve his delivery for no more than four hits, while the Woodmen pounded eight bingles off Frank DiNenna. The game was played on the No. 9 diamond, West Potomac Park.

Woodmen Score in Fourth.

The Woodmen scored in the fourth when Jimmy George doubled and Louis Fridinger singled, but the Blue Flames got the run back in the same inning when Snyder walked, took second on a sacrifice, third on Pusateri's single and stole home on Charlie Booker's rather belayed windup.

In the fifth, the Woodmen went ahead. Fugitt singled, Bryan and Bounke walked and Monk Barbour, former Eastern High player, doubled to center, driving in both runners. In the sixth they added another, but in the seventh, Cliff Keyser tripled to score the Valets' second run after Lewis had singled.

Booker throttled a Blue Flame rally in the eighth by fanning two men in a row after a hit and two walks had filled the sacks. He set the champs back in 1-2-3 order in the ninth. Lewis grounded to first and then Booker fanned Keyser and DiNinna for the last two counts, running his strike-out total to seven.

The Shady Grove victory was due chiefly to a six-run rally in the last half of the seventh. Odie Hilleary led off by hitting a homer to right-center. The rest of the scoring was due t osingles by Harding, Tibert, Roberts and Nolan, a double by Eddie Dove and a triple by Frankie Baroni.

Wheeler Hits Homer.

Waverley Wheeler, of the Barbecuers, hit a homer in the first inning with one man on and another in the third with none on. John Boyd's homer for the Pigs in the second with one o ntied the score at 2-2. Belt then got on Dove's error, Bailey walked, Mostow bunted and Dove's bad throw scored both Belt and Bailey. Giovenetti tingled to drive in the fourth run of the inning.

The victory was a personal triumph for Baroni over Lefty Joe Sullivan, his erstwhile inter-high rival from Eastern. Sullivan was nailed for 17 hits, while Baroni allowed but seven. He was wild, however, throwing two wild pitches and six bases on balls. Nine of the 10 Shady Grove players got at least one hit.

The Brewers demonstrated a new punch in their hitting in swamping the hitherto unbeaten Printers. While Everett Russell, slight Heurich outfielder, demonstrated his talent on the mound by holding the Printers to eight scattered hits, he and his teammates crashed out 17 hits. Russell also hit a home run.

Ross Jewelers Win.

Fee Colliere, the winners' rotund catcher, led the attack with a single, double and a triple in four trips to the plate. Huck Stahl also connected safely three times. The Brewers drove George Mosedale out of the box in the fourth and then went to work on Carl Bean.

In Section "B," the Ross Jewelers experienced their first defeat of the season. Nolan Motors, battling for first place in the section, tacked an 11-6 defeat on them. Harry Colliflower's triple to right-center in the sixth with the bases loaded figured largely in the result. Colliflower added another run when he scored from third when the catcher, Miller, dropped the ball on Redonni's third strike. Cagan hit a home run with nobody on in the seventh. Kirkpatrick allowed eight hits and fanned 11.

In the only other Section B game played, National Novelty went into a tie for third place by nosing out Old Manhattan Beer, 8 to 7, on Fred Miller's home run to deep center in the ninth inning. National Novelty had scored four runs a few frames previously when Miller got on on an error and Deck, Etter, W. Stack and Carl Stack singled in a row and Ray O'Neil doubled. Garner, of Old Manhattan, fanned 12, but allowed 12 hits. Tamagini hit the first ball pitched for a home run for Manhattan. O'Neil hit a homer in the fourth.

Woodmen of the World Oak Camp forfeited its franchise by forfeiting its game to the District Grocers. The Woodmen were unable to gather enough players, although the Grocers waited three-quarter of an hour.

Culpeper Wins Home Opener By 6 to 4

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Culpeper, Va., June 7.—Approximately 600 fans saw Culpeper Athletic Club win its opening home game of the Valley League season today over Charlottesville, for two victories in as many starts.

"Rosy" Waugh allowed nine hits, and aided his victory with two hits, driving in one run and placing another in scoring position.

Douglass and Waugh connected for four of the locals' ten hits, Campbell getting a triple in the third.

Bair, for Culpeper did the receiving in Class A style. Humphries, with two away in the ninth and two on made a spectacular catch to rob the hitter of a safety and prevent a tie score. Culpeper plays Orange here Tuesday.

The annual scramble for the National City League junior championship and the gold baseball which the Washington Post Sandlot Association will award the first-place team at the close of the season began yesterday with eight clubs in action.

All but one of the four games developed into hard-fought battles. Simpson's Pharmacy was the exception, the drug store team swamping New Deal Men's Shop, 13 to 0, on No. 9 diamond in West Potomac Park. Bob Rafferty, star Western High right-hander, held the New Dealers to three hits, all singles. Francis Coakley, all-high outfielder, hit a home run for Simpson's.

The Pep Boy Juniors and the George's Radio Shop nine, bitter rivals of 1935, met on No. 10 diamond, with the Pep Boys pounding out 15 hits to defeat the Radio boys, 8 to 5. Dewey Poole, of Central High, who was the only pitcher to beat the Georges last year, hurling a no-hit, no-run game to do it, held the opposition to six hits. Southcomb, with two singles and a triple, led the winners' attack.

Flood Juniors Win.

The J. C. Flood Juniors rallied in the last inning with three runs to defeat the West End Laundry, 5 to 3. With a raft of Tech High team members in the line-up, the Floods accumulated nine hits off Kilmer Bortz, star Woodraw Wilson High hurler.

A crowd of 1,000 fans gathered on the South Ellipse to see the colorful Police Boys Club team meet the Clarendon Juniors. The Police boys took a 7-5 decision from the Virginians. The brilliant red uniforms of the Police team and the dazzling white suits of the Clarendons with royal blue lettering made the occasion more or less a riot of color.

Lefty Walter Stockwell, of Eastern High, fanned 10 men and allowed the Clarendon team but five hits. All of the Clarendon runs came through Police errors. It was the Police boys' fourth straight victory of the season. E. McConchie, of the Police team, hit a home run. Al Cohill, of the same team, also connected for four bases but failed to touch third, thereby getting credit for only a double.

Takoma squeezed out a 3-to-1 victory over District yesterday as the National City Midget League of The Post Association got under way. Other games saw the Nationwides whip the Southerners, 6 to 1, and the Versis swamp Wizard Locksmith Co. under a count of 11 to 6.

Individual honors in the Takoma-District game went to Pitcher Webb, of the winners. Besides setting the opposition down with 7 scattered hits, hefanner 8 batsmen and contributed a timely hit of his own.

A peculiar angle to the first day's play was the fact that First-baseman Hodgson, of the losing Southerners, captured batting distinction with 3 hits out of 4 trips to the plate. He was the only man to knock a home run.

On the Air Today

A preview of the excitement at Cleveland this week will be given by the National Broadcasting Co. tonight (WMAL, at 9:30), in a round table discussion by the network's recruited cast of commentators and observers. Participating will be the veteran Graham McNamee, who handled an entire national convention with the sole assistance of Phil Carlin, in 1924; Dorothy Thompson, the author; Bill Hard, Walter Lippman, Lowell Thomas and Edwin C. Hill.

The tenor of the half-hour will be a discussion of such questions as: Will the Republican nominee be named on the first, second or 'teenth ballot? What is the convention eve rating of Landon, Vandenberg, Borah and others? What's the "dope" and gossip from the inner sanctums like?

And I cannot refrain from saying most emphatically that although the radio networks will provide an amazing service to the citizenry while the conventions are at work, the telegraphed stories of the staff from The Post cannot be equaled for a clear, concise and interpretative account of what goes on from day to day.

Listen to the radio accounts, and then read those articles by Frank Waltman, Bob Albright, Ed Folliard, Sidney Olson, Felix Bruner and, of course, the analysis applied to the whole by Felix Morley, editor of The Post, each morning this week.

Another event in Cleveland is expected to draw a big crowd of radio celebrities a little later in the month. Scores of air personalities already have signed for appearances at the Great Lakes Exposition, opening June 27. A special arena, to be called "Radioland," will seat 13,000 persons for these appearances. Among those to be present are Ray Perkins, Stoopnagle and Budd, Connie Gates, Jerry Cooper, Irene Beasley, Robert Simmons, Honeyboy and Sassafras, the Revelers, the veteran Alice Joy and the Bucaneers.

N. B. C.'s Alois Havrile, who won the 1925 American Academy's diction medal, comes by his foreign sounding name very directly. He was born in Cechoslovakia and came to the United States before his fourth birthday. He sails in July for a visit on the continent—and is looking forward to it with unusual delight. The trip is a present to his 15-year-old daughter, Constance, who is graduating this month from high school in Englewood, N. J. They'll visit Pressov, his native village, after stops in London and Paris. Havrilla did not speak English until he was 12. Until then, he attended a Slovakian school in Connecticut. From that early schooling to a coveted diction award on the air is an intriguing accomplishment. This is his first trip to Europe.

Culbertson on Bridge

Responding to Opening Two No Trump Bids.

A two no trump bid shows 5½ honor tricks, and sometimes more. Therefore, according to the 4-5-6 scale of expectancies, you may raise your partner to three no trump with as little as one-half an honor trick, or may take out in a five card or longer biddable suit with one-half an honor trick. With less you should pass, unless you have a long major suit.

When your partner bids three no trump, you may look forward to a slam when your hand contains a five card biddable suit and as much as one-half an honor trick, or a six-card suit. You simply bid your suit, for any suit-bid is a slam-try.

Guaging the Distribution.

In many cases, brilliant opening leads are based on precisely one point: the leader's correct assumption of the way a certain suit will be divided. Consider the imaginative but sound reasoning back of the opening lead in the hand shown below.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 spade	Pass	2 dimds.	Pass
2 no trp.	Pass	3 spades	Pass
3 no trp.	Pass	4 dimds.	Pass

5 dimds. (final bid)

West, on lead, gave the most careful consideration to the bidding. He reflected that North's repeated shying away from his own suit strongly implied shortness. It was almost inconceivable that North, with a five-card suit, and after a raise on the second round by his partner, would have preferred (first) to play for a no trump game and (second) to reach for a minor suit game rather than contract for only ten tricks in spades.

South's spade length was easy to read. With less than three spades he would not have given even a delayed raise, and with more than three he would have gone back to spades over three no trump game. Thus, it was virtually certain that North-South had a combined spade length of seven cards, leaving two in East's hand.

This point established, West next considered the other suits. Of all the trick possibilities in East's hand, a trump trick appeared most likely. West's singleton trump, and the fact that North-South probably would have stayed in no trump with a solid diamond suit were testimony to this assumption.

On this reasoning, West decided to lead his fourth highest spade, and the eventual result was gratifying. East used his ace to trump at the first opportunity, and returned his remaining spade. West took the ace and played a third round which East ruffed for the setting trick.

Obviously, no other lead, no other defense could have defeated the contract.

The Federal Diary

By Betty Read.

The only woman chief clerk in the Commerce Department is Miss Flossie White of the Bureau of Fisheries.

With information about the Bureau at her fingertips, she says that one of the great problems of the work is providing elevators and ladders for fish. Yes, elevators and ladders.

That brought a smile, but Miss White was serious about a matter which would mean the total extinction of certain species, such as salmon and others that have habits of swimming up rivers for spawning, unless means were devised of getting them past the great river dams that dot the Western waterways.

"This is the problem," she stated. "Fish with habits of swimming far up rivers for spawning periods are blocked by the dams. They will never turn back, but would butt themselves to death against the concrete structures if they were not provided with a way of getting over them. That would mean the end of some of our big fish industries. It is not a simple or a meaningless problem."

But how is a fish persuaded into an elevator or how does it climb a fish ladder? Miss White explained the devices work somewhat in the fashion of canal locks.

"Wherever there is an opening which means moving forward toward the source of th eriver, a fish will find it—even though it may mean an advance of but a few feet. These openings are left in the dams for the fish to go into and every so often they operate like a canal lock and the waters rise lifting the fish to a higher level," she said.

The Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River in Washington has a perfect elevation system for its swimmers, but at present there is almost an international situation caused by the height of the Grand Coulee Dam on the same river.

"This dam is so high that neither elevators nor ladders will work," Miss White said, "so we are devising fish-ways for the salmon and other fish to get around the dam. But as yet, there has been no definite agreement on exactly what type of fish-ways these should be. Canada has an interest in this dam and must be consulted on the provisions for the fish. So must the War Department and also the Reclamation division, which has taken on the job of mapping out an acceptable method.

The Grand Coulee dam is well up the river and is placed after both the Bonneville and Rock Island dams. The same elevation problem is being met in other sections of the country, she said, although the Columbia River problem is one of the most acute because of the size of the fish industry along its banks and its importance because of the large number of Government employes it provides for.

Miss White's career, which now seems well defined in Government channels, has been so varied previously that it sounds like an adventure tale. A native Kentuckian, she has gone into numerous business ventures in Washington State between Government jobs.

She has been a real estate operator in Seattle, a chicken farmer and a rancher, returning between times to Government offices here and in the West. In April, 1933, she was reinstated after her ranching experience and placed in the Bureau of Fisheries, of which she became chief clerk in August of that year.

A novel meeting of members of the newly formed National Archives Association is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon. The announcement states "the president will rush the proceedings in order that the meeting may not last longer than a few minutes."

The association aims to be "just one big family," which is the idea of the archivist, Robert D. W. Connor. At present the group is occupied with mapping out athletic and other activities. There is a surprising number of musicians among the Archive workers—pianists, 'cellists, organists, violinists.

The recent order for only one lunch period for the 800 or so AAA employes in the Rental and Benefit Audit section has meant such confusion, and so many hungry men and women because of lack of time to eat that it has been rescinded by the comptroller, Wiliam F. Callander.

Beginning today there will be two one-half-hour lunch periods for those on the day shift and two for the night workers. Many of the workers either went without their meals or brought them to eat in their offices, as they found it impossible to be accommodated in the eating places of the neighborhood. The new schedule calls for lunch hours during the day from 11:30 to noon and from 12:05 to 12:35. The evening meal hours are now from 6:55 to 7:25 and from 7:30 to 8 o'clock.

No change was made in the abolition of one of the two ten-minute rest periods during working hours.

Walter M. Hiley, who has been doing auditing work in the Processing tax division of the Internal Revenue, has been transferred to the Bureau of Statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Ralph Pierce of the same division will go to the Bureau of Motor Carriers of the I. C. C. About 500 employes in this division were affected by the Supreme Court decision on the processing tax and more than 100 of them have been transferred to other Government services.

Financial and Business Review

Finished Steel Shipments Hold High Average

Bulk of Current Buying Is for Immediate Consumption.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, June 7.—The magazine Steel said today that shipments of finished steel are holding "to an unusually high average" and reported an increase of 1 point to 67 per cent in national steelworks operations.

The publicatoin said that the demand has reld up "without the impetus of heavy speculative buying following the general price advance for third quarter." Most of the current purchasing is for immediate consumption, Steel said:

"Orders for cold-rolled strip, wire rods, plain wire and merchant wire products are being accepted for next quarter at unchanged prices," the magazine said. "Tool steel makers have announced increases of 5 to 6 per cent, and increases of about 5 per cent have been scheduled for the principal items of bolts and nuts. The market on standard rails has been extended unchanged for the third quarter.

Auto Decline Offset.

"Railroad, structural, agricultural and miscellaneous specifications served to offset the slow recession 101,896 last week, 6,404 units under in shipments of automotive steel. Automobile assemblies dropped to the previous week.

"Orders for steel for the remaining 1936 models have been placed and the material now on order or in transit will see the industry practically through July. Farm implement and tractor orders were reported near 90 per cent of the 1929 peak and tin plate mills were operating at full capacity for the fourth consecutive week, the magazine said.

"Daily average pig iron production in May, 85,795 gross tons, was 6.8 per cent over April, while the total for the month, 2,659,643 tons, was 10.4 per cent higher than April."

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Week's Business Statistics Favorable but Stock Trading Continues Dull.

New York, June 7.—Securities passed through a dull week. In steel, railroad transportation, electricity output, and motor car sales the business statistics of the week were mainly favorable. They pointed nevertheless to the beginning of a seasonal slackening in activity, a trend which this summer probably will be offset to a considerable extent by the distribution of the soldiers' bonus, which begins the middle of the month.

Stocks probably have done a good deal to anticipate the fillip to trade that will bring, and market for the next two months is likely to be one of appraisal of the autumn prospects plus reaction to political influences at home and financial developments aboard.

The foreign situation as regards sentiment at least grew more acute this week, as large gold exports from Paris intensified the anxiety over the franc's future. Yesterday the new radical government assumed control in France, and nobody knows just how much of a swing to the left will follow. It is certain that the new Socialist leaders are opposed to any further deflation in France, while on the surface pretending support to the gold standard. How the two diverging lines can be brought together is a problem, and most foreign observers feel that it can't be done; that the problem will be solved by at least a partial brake on the free gold standard.

Currency Uncertainty.

France still has plenty of gold to support the currency circulation, but probably does not wish to deplete the reserves further for fear of weakening her position in case of war. Moreover, the flight of capital from France has gone so far that the question scarcely is an economic one, but one rather of politics. If any early action is taken it likely will be to restrict capital exports, so far as possible, and to license the export of gold. That would in effect put the franc on a managed currency basis. It might invite devaluation of other currencies, to the detriment of world trade; eventually it probably will lead to stabilization on a new basis and repatriation of French capital, but to overcome present nervousness capital must now have more than reassurance on devaluation. It is in addition purturbed by extensive strikes in France, Spain and other countries which lead to the ever present fear of communism.

Politics and Debt.

In any event the situation scarcely suggests large scale liquidation of foreign capital now invested in American markets. Currently foreign buying and selling are about in balance. Foreign investors doubtless feel the same way as do American buyers, i. e., that our own future is by no means assured. From a stock market viewpoint over the next two or three years, political programs involving constitutional questions and even social legislation probably are less important than the burning issue of the public debt. If expansion there is not to be checked, and quickly, business surely will decline, although it might have a temporary period of inflation.

The real extent of the Federal debt is not generally known. Figures on the gross debt have been published. On May 31 it stood at $31,636,000,000. To that must be added $1,100,000,000 which will be added on June 15 to cover bonus initial payments. Moreover, a guaranteed debt of $4,700,000,000 is certainly a part of the Federal obligation.

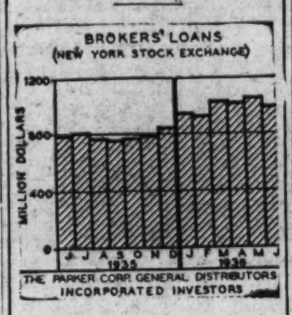
Over Forty Billions

Those figures bring the gross debt to approximately $38,500,000,000, but they do not tell the whole story. Appropriations and allocations for relief and special spending, with deductions for expended portions, now foot up to $2,000,000,000. Our real national debt at this time is therefore more than $40,000,000,000.

Gratification was felt in official circles over the huge oversubscription (nearly seven times) to the Treasury borrowing of a billion of new money. Allowance must be made for the patent fact that subscriptions were heavily padded, but even so the demand for the new securities reveals the vast extent of unemployed short term funds. They are unfortunately the result of heavy gold imports, Treasury operations of a spending nature, and slack business rather than of rising prosperity. It might be better in the long run if the market were beginning to gag on new Treasury loans. The effect of a big loan failure would be salutary on Congress and might even exert pressure toward diverting the Administration from its spendthrift and bankruptcy program.

Private financing continues to be of a refunding nature solely, to take advantage of low interest rates, a movement that may be hastened by increasing discussion of the question whether money rates have reached their low point and whether the authorities might soon begin to reduce excess reserves. Stocks are only mildly interested in those questions, for speculation has been dealt a heavy blow on other counts—higher margin requirements and harrying of professional operators by the SEC. The market may be given the bit, as campaign strategy, but it looks as though no general field day for speculation will be proclaimed.

Brokers' Loans Less Than Sixth of 1929



Boston, Mass., June .—In the early months of a bull market investment buying predominates. Large investors and institutions buy stocks for cash. Then the public gets interested and speculation increases. Since last September brokers' loans increased quite rapidly, indicating speculative trading. At that, brokers' loans are relatively less than one-sixth the total amount in 1929.

Steel Exports Gain 53% Over Last Year

Exports of finished and semi-finished iron and steel products in April amounted to 105,081 tons, compared with 96,884 tons in March and 68,484 tons in April, 1935, the Department of Commerce reported.

Exports of all classes of scrap in April totaled 196,906 tons, compared with 167,453 tons in March and 136,857 tons in April, 1935.

Great Western Power Calls 5% Bonds

New York, June 7 (AP).—Great Western Power, a subsidiary of Pacific Gas & Electric Co., has called for redemption, July 1, $18,446,000 first mortgage 5 per cent bonds, due 1946, at 106. Funds for the retirement were provided in the parent company's recent refinancing program.

Average Tobacco Prices.

New York, June 7 (AP).—The average price of U. S. type 12 flue cured tobacco during the week ended June 6 was 17 cents per pound compared with 24.4 cents in the same week last year, according to H. A. Stich, tobacco economist.

Sugar Quotas.

The sugar section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has issued its fifth monthly report of 1936 on the status of the sugar quotas. The report shows that the quantity of sugar charged against the 1936 quotas for Cuba, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Hawaii during the first five months of 1936 amounted to 2,856,790 short tons raw value.

May Business Proves Higher Than Forecasts

All Indices but Bank Debits and Building Exceed Predictions.

New York, June 7.—Perhaps the most significant feature of May business statistics is that they were so uniformly higher than had been expected in the earlier part of the month. The normal late spring letdown in industrial activity as a whole and in many of the major divisions of industry, which almost every one took for granted, did not appear. On the contrary industry stubbornly resisted seasonal depressing forces, attesting the soundness of fundamental demand for materials and merchandise.

Steel production for the month of May was at an average of 68.5 per cent of capacity, whereas early in the month a rate of 65 to 67 per cent was all that had been hoped for. Output of automobiles was expected to be around 450,000 cars but the final figures for the month are now forecast at around a half million.

Practically all the other indexes of business except building and bank debits finished the month at a higher level than was looked for earlier, and the relative recessions in these two indexes was slight. Gains over earlier forecasts were registered by electric power and carloadings.

Aircraft Production Gains 33 1-3% in Year

Aircraft production in the United States for the first quarter of 1936 increased 33 1-3 per cent over the same period of 1935, the Department of Commerce reported.

Aircraft manufactured during the first three months of 1936 totaled 456, while for the same period of last year the figure was 349.

Chemical Exports Higher.

Chemical exports in April were valued at $12,700,000, compared with $9,903,000 in April, 1935, the Department of Commerce reported. Demand for turpentine, sulphur, benzol, fertilizers and mixed paints was particularly active.

RENT AN ACCORDION
and we'll give you lessons at no Extra cost!
• Frankly we want to sell more accordions and realize that the best way to do it is to show people how simple this instrument is to play and how fascinating it is to know how to play it, so, for a short time we're giving people who rent an accordion lessons at no cost under competent instructors. All that's necessary is that you come in, choose an instrument, pay the weekly rental fee of $1.50 and we arrange for the instruction. And here's the best part of the offer. If at the end of say six weeks you decide you've learned to play well enough to buy an accordion we'll allow you every penny you've paid in rental towards the purchase price.* If interested come in at once as this offer is only open for a very limited time.

Let's Go

By J. Carver Pusey

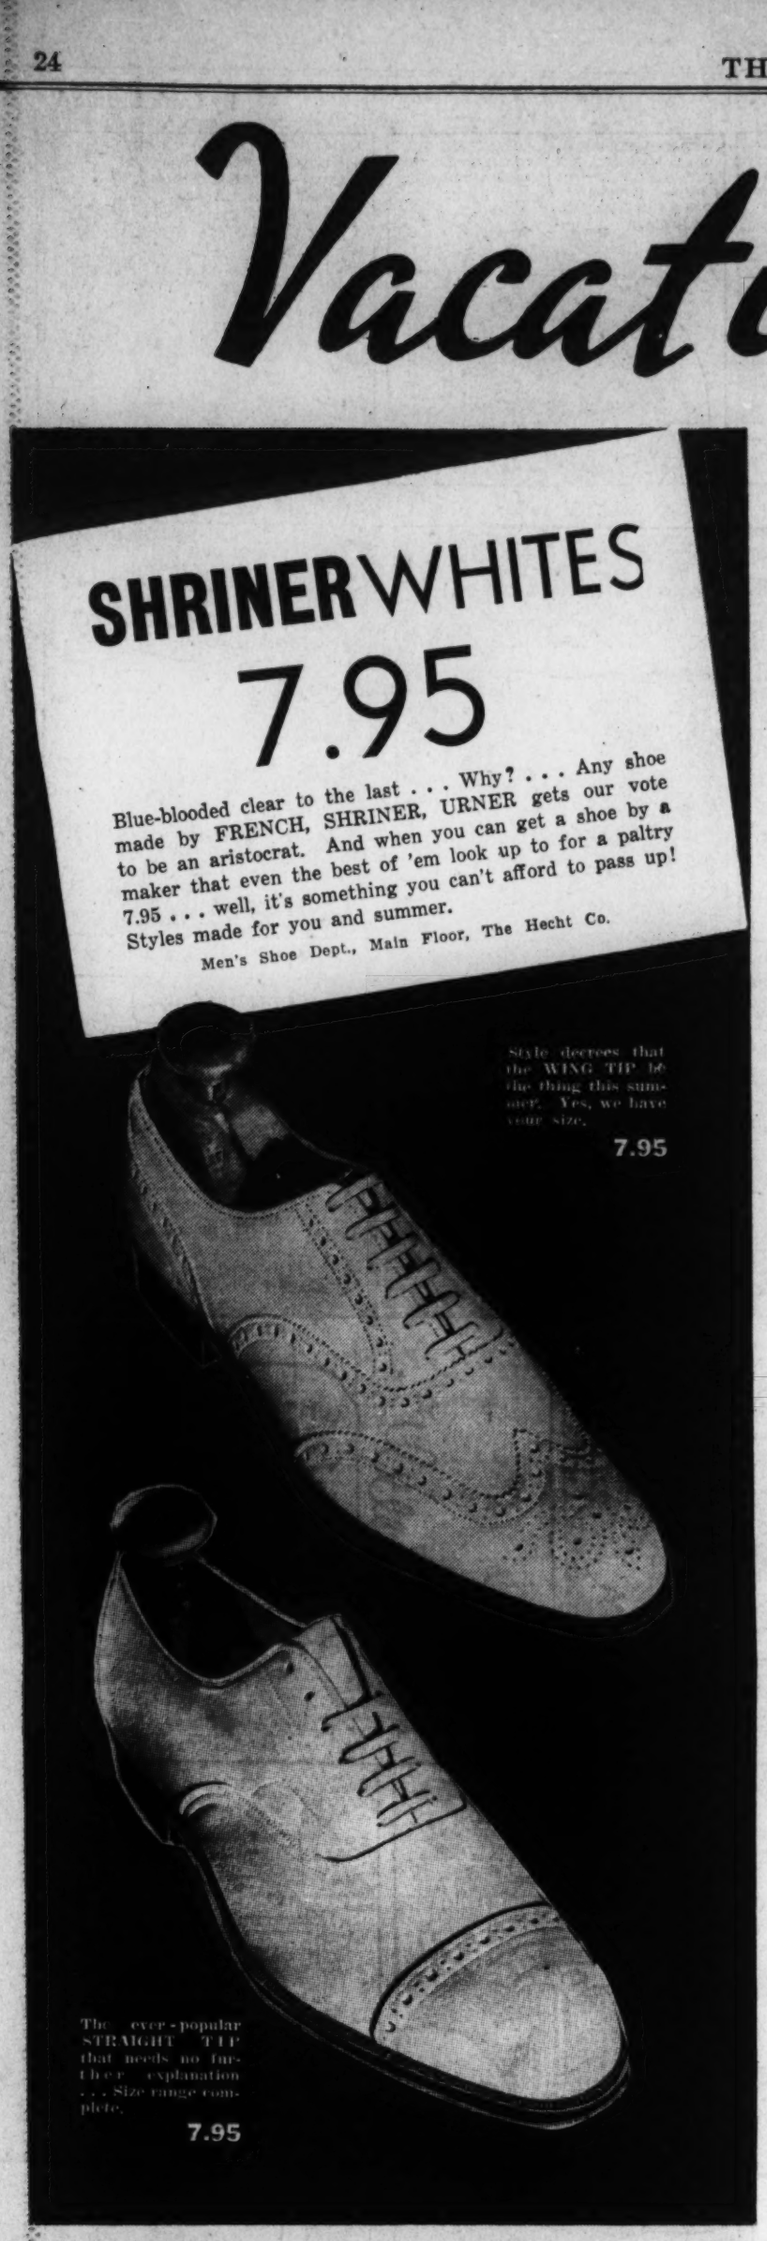
Vacation Minded?

We all are to a certain extent . . . (mostly a great extent, we venture). Some of you are already making reservations. Others of you are going to be tied to the old swivel chair for a few weeks longer. But whether you are going now or not, it will pay you to investigate every item on this page. Every one is a "must" for that vacation wardrobe. Every one is equally a "must" for wear in the office and in town. You'll find waiting for the Boss to say "go" (and we don't mean fired) much less tedious in clothes that are as just vacation-minded as you are yourself. And, take it from us, these clothes are exactly that.

SHRINER WHITES 7.95

Blue-blooded clear to the last . . . Why? . . . Any shoe made by FRENCH, SHRINER, URNER gets our vote to be an aristocrat. And when you can get a shoe by a maker that even the best of 'em look up to for a paltry 7.95 . . . well, it's something you can't afford to pass up! Styles made for you and summer.

Men's Shoe Dept., Main Floor, The Hecht Co.



Style decrees that the WING TIP be the thing this summer. Yes, we have your size.

Society Brand TROPICALS $25

We only wish that Air Conditioning could be installed in men's clothing. Since, however, that day has not arrived, it is our opinion that the Society Brand Tropical with the famous SKY-BREEZE lining is the nearest thing to it. SKY-BREEZE lining is, you know, a pourous, mesh-like fabric that keeps heat off you like an electric fan would. And, of course, Society Brand's own distinctive styling in Tropical Worsteds and Wool Crashes.

"Manhattan" Summer Shirts $2

The Manhattan "Vericool" summer shirts hardly need lengthy comment . . . It's difficult for us to comprehend a cooler garment for summer. Of course, you know Manhattan's reputation for fine shirts . . . and, due to the special open weave, "Vericools" are a revelation in hot weather comfort. Collars Manhattanized to stay fresh all day long. Blue or white. Other Manhattan Shirts $2.50 to $5.00.

"Mansco" Shirts and Shorts 55c

The maintenance of a cool frame of mind is helped no little bit by correctly fitting shorts. The makers of Manhattan Shirts have done a great deal toward making this situation possible in their Mansco shirts and shorts. Made to the most exacting specifications to give you expert fitting and coolness supreme. Latest colors and patterns.

Doncaster Sport Shirts 2.50

We present the Doncaster TWIN, made of fine Du Pont Rayon. The "Kavan" by Doncaster is the "super-ultra" in sport shirts this summer. Body-yielding and ice cool, we predict (with your permission) these sport shirts will hit new highs in popularity with men of all types. Newest summer colors. Small, medium, large.
